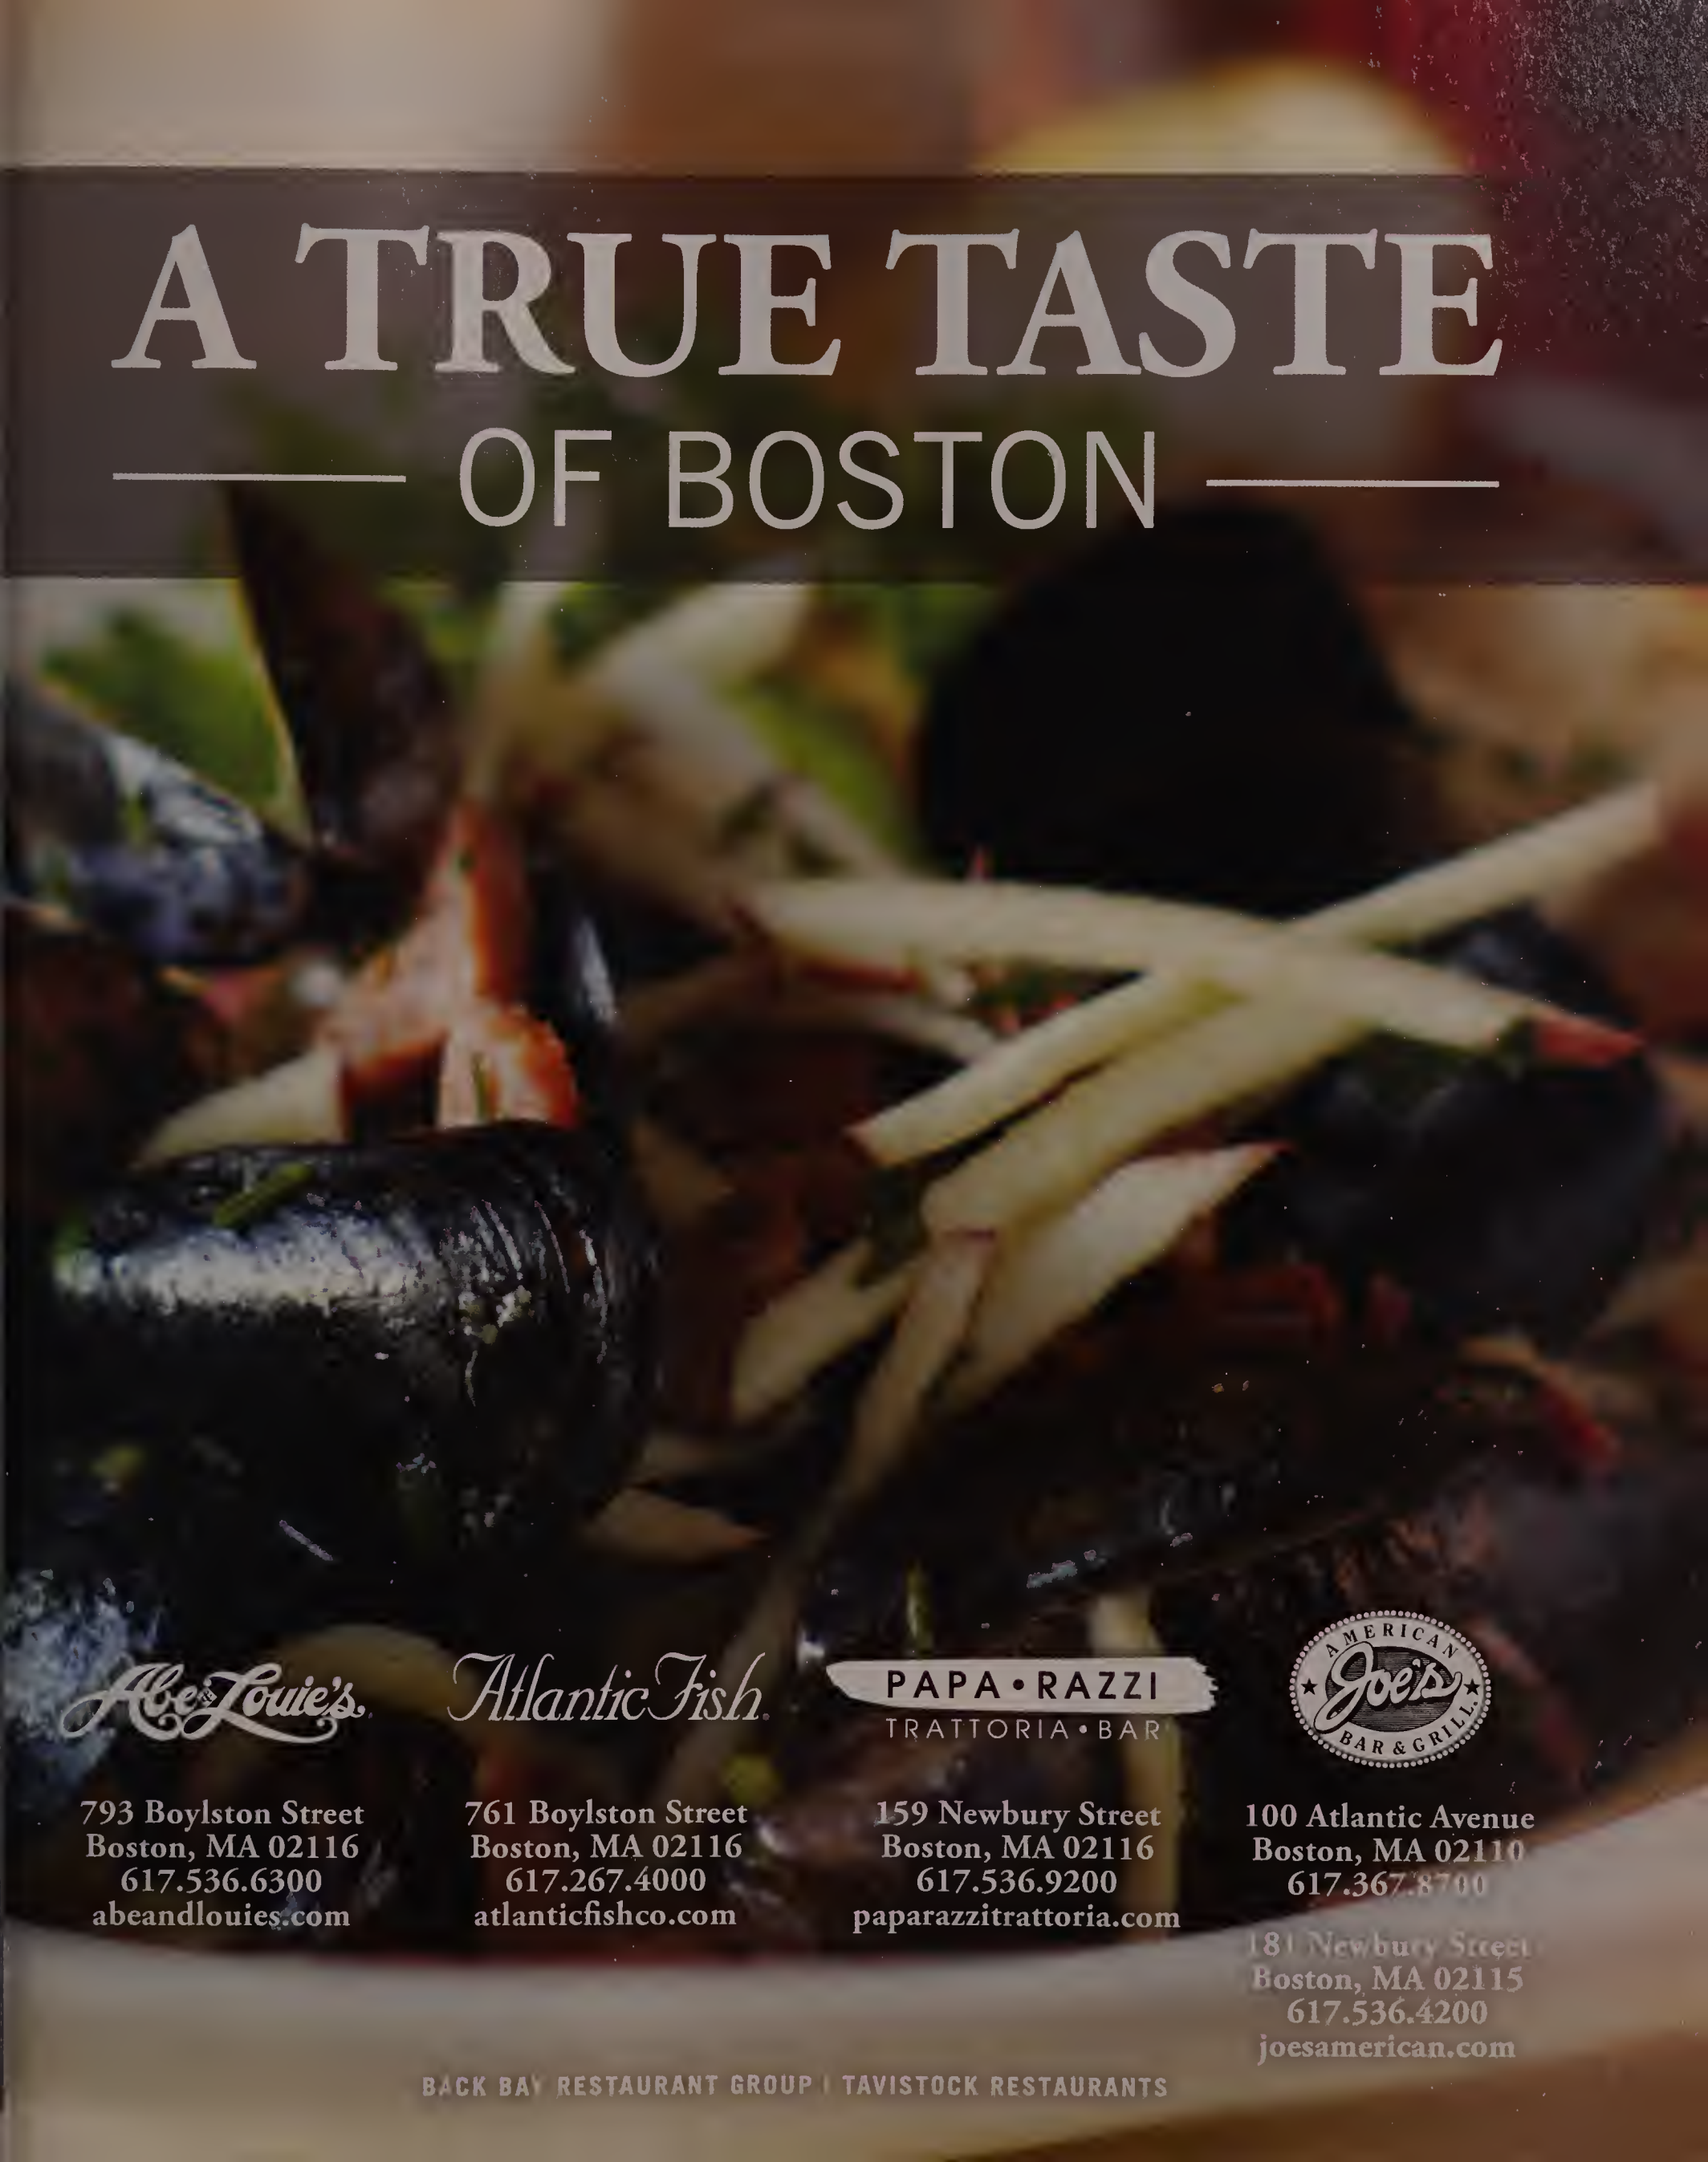
MODEL CITIZENS

Local fashion models are looking good.

THE LOCAL INDUSTRY IS MORE ROBUST THAN YOU'D IMAGINE.

THEY ELICIT AS much cultural mockery as they do envy, yet they work in the only profession (that's not in comic books) to occasionally merit the prefix "super." Fashion models are taking over the city this month during Boston Fashion Week, Sept. 23–30. Cynics may mutter about all the top models having a 212 area code, but the local industry is more robust than you'd imagine.

"It's a struggle to get people to understand how big the talent pool is here," says Robert Casey of agency Maggie, Inc. "We have so many more models here than people know—young people who use Boston as a training ground before going to a bigger city, plus many who've done bigger markets and then moved back to Boston because it's a better quality of life."



Boston models also face more challenges, says Casey, than in any other market of its size. "We're the only city that has to compete with New York, geographically. We're close enough so that Boston clients can fly a Manhattan model in to do a job for one day, which means local models have to work harder to get chosen."

They also just work hard, period. Many are working 26 shows during Fashion Week alone (often for less than $100 per show), and the vast majority hold down second and third jobs so they can make rent. "They don't make nearly as much as most people think," says Joe Freeman, co-owner of Dynasty Agency, Inc. "They can do extremely well one week, but have no bookings the next."

As for who's getting booked regularly (for both shows and shoots), Casey insists that Boston favors a specific look. "No one here wants a model who looks intimidating," he says. "It's girl next door, but a much more perfect version. Someone who does well here might not in Miami, and vice versa. We are the land of classic looks." ALEXANDRA HALL

First Taste

CHEEKY ATTITUDE

A barbecue joint isn't the first thing you'd expect for chef Tiffani Faison's hotly anticipated comeback, and she wouldn't have it any other way. "Maybe it's risky, but this is something I've always wanted to do," she says about Sweet Cheeks, a Fenway spot she'll launch in mid-October. "The pressure I feel isn't because of a track record; it's more personal. I want to do the absolute best that I can without buying into the hype."

The 34-year-old gained national attention as a four-time Top Chef contestant (and viewer favorite for her no-bull attitude), but it was her most recent stint at Rocca that made her a force to be reckoned with on the local scene. That restaurant's unceremonious demise came as a shock to fans and to Faison herself, who'd collected a trophy case of stellar reviews crediting her with breathing new life into the misguided space. "In reality, what happened was all blessing and no disguise," she says. "But it was incredibly hard."

Faison has used the last nine months to scope real estate across the city and plot her next move. When the Boylston Street location that formerly housed Cambridge One became available, she seized the opportunity to bring a purist's view of barbecue to Boston. "Here barbecue isn't rooted, so it doesn't translate as well," she adds. "This is the food I grew up with, so it's in my bones."

"THIS IS THE FOOD I GREW UP WITH, SO IT'S IN MY BONES."

The space takes advantage of an open layout with communal tables, while an outdoor patio for warmer months boosts capacity to nearly 200. Distressed wood walls add a down-home warmth that's echoed in the food. Lots of soulful classics will appear, including black-eyed peas and okra, as well as more whimsical dishes like a house-made spin on Nutter Butters. Hungry passersby can grab takeout, including sauced meats by the pound, fresh from the on-site smoker.

To draw inspiration for her menu, Faison road-tripped through Texas with chef de cuisine Dan Raia and photographer Mike Diskin, stopping at landmarks like Franklin Barbecue and Black's. That kind of history plays an important role in Sweet Cheeks' traditionalist view. "There aren't going to be any twists on this menu," Faison insists. "That would be disrespectful to the kind of food that I'm trying to do." KYLE WRIGHT

Plus, the ease of being green

GET DOWN AT THE W LATER this month, when Descent opens in a cozy, basement-level space. Although the menu hasn't been finalized, the spotlight is on a cocktail program masterminded by renowned mixologist Charlotte Voisey. Speakeasy is the theme, with a design accented by "old-school, bordello, Hollywood lights," thus in keeping with the bar's location on the edge of the city's former red-light district.

The Fireplace goes green.

JIM SOLOMON'S THE FIREPLACE IS celebrating its 10th anniversary. His Brookline restaurant has also been named the first green restaurant in the Boston area. It's hard to tell which achievement gives Solomon more pride. "I'm elated to be here; it's really a trip," he says. "I always believed in corporate responsibility."

The Fireplace's transformation began with the simple step of recycling. Soon, Solomon had tinted the restaurant's windows to save energy, switched to a nonchemical, biodegradable cleaner and, most recently, replaced the bottled water that graced each table with reusable vessels of house-filtered water purified by ultraviolet light. "We make it easy for people to make a green decision," says Solomon.

BRINGING DIM SUM TO CAMBRIDGE, East by Northeast has introduced a Sunday brunchtime menu featuring creative treats like a scallion pancake sandwich with fried egg, pork loin confit and plum sauce. Dumplings are stuffed with pork and golden beets, and served with beet puree and purslane. Craving something sweet? Try the sesame-and-fennel rice croquette with maple syrup.

CENTER STAGE

Four-time Tony Award–winner Audra McDonald has been dazzling audiences in The Gershwins' Porgy & Bess at the American Repertory Theater and prepping for its Broadway launch this December. She's also known for her role in ABC's Private Practice. McDonald opens the 2011–2012 Celebrity Series with a concert at Symphony Hall on Oct. 2.

Do you feel pressure to live up to people's expectations in the role of Bess?
Anytime you're working on a new show or a new role, there's always pressure to succeed. That's part of what makes it artistically fulfilling.

What drew you to the part?
I've wanted to play Bess my entire life. It's a very heavy role to sing, and I've never known if I was ready. When we turned it into a musical, we had to make some adjustments just to be able to survive. And, of course, there are very few roles in musical theater that are specifically written for an African-American woman, so in that way it's iconic.

Is acting on TV a completely different beast?
On TV you have to be much more contained because the audience and the camera are right in your face. On stage, you can be objective and fill the entire theater with emotion.

How do you choose what to perform in concert?
It's a mix of songs that I want to sing because I enjoy them, and songs that I want to sing because they're a challenge and they move me. I always try to introduce some new material, whether it's to the audience or to me. KYLE WRIGHT

Wine

Up in Smoke

Beer is the usual drink of choice during the last weeks of grilling season, but if you're not a fan of hops, consider pairing your meats with a red that's bold and fruity, earthy and gutsy. This combination best matches the chew and powerful, sometimes slightly sweet, tangy flavors of ribs, steaks and sauce. White, rosé and understated red wines tend to get shouted down.

This season, there's a tremendous choice of moderately priced, in-your-face reds (mostly from warm climates outside Europe). The following are blind-tasting champs in their weight class. A tip: When drinking wine, go easy on the barbecue sauce.

Mitolo "The Jester" Shiraz McLaren Vale Australia, 2009 ($21, Marty's, Newton) From the first whiff of smoke to the rich chocolate-covered berry flavors, the Jester asserts itself as a classic match for ribs charred in a spicy rub. Australia is definitely a place to avoid if you're looking to cheap out (under $10), as the wines can taste diluted, but at this medium-price point, consider it an overlooked source of world-class value.

Kangarilla Road Shiraz McLaren Vale Australia, 2008 ($20, Cambridge Wine & Spirits) Kangarilla may sound like an Aussie monster flick, but it's a full-bodied, juicy red with pronounced white-pepper accents—ideal with steak tips that aren't too heavily seasoned. This is a touch more moderate in style, with slightly more palate-cleansing acid bite.

Mauritson Zinfandel Dry Creek Valley, 2009 ($27, The Urban Grape, Chestnut Hill) The great news about zinfandel with barbecue (or without it) is that it boasts concentrated dark fruit flavor minus the tannins of cabernet, which sometimes react negatively with a sweet sauce. Clay Mauritson is one of the unsung heroes of Sonoma County; everything this fifth-generation grape grower touches turns out delicious. This jammy, herb-scented powerhouse of a wine is no exception. It's an all-purpose winner.

Drink of the Moment

A Cordial Salud

This summer's Tales of the Cocktail—an annual New Orleans event where mixology masterminds shake, stir and opine on liquor trends—predicted an imminent "pisco boom." Good news for Taranta, a pint-sized North End eatery that's a pisco destination, featuring a year-round menu of three ingenious uses of the grape liqueur. (They've only got a beer, wine and cordial license, so cocktails are necessarily creative.)

The restaurant's Lima-meets-Lucca vittles inspire the drinks. "In Peru, cocktails are more popular than beer," says beverage manager Alex Galimberti. Take the TUMBA CHOLA ($10), a refreshing beverage that mirrors chef/owner Jose Duarte's cuisine. It marries Peruvian pisco with Italian-style limoncello and white grape juice, and makes a delicious digestif.

A traditional rendition of the PISCO SOUR ($12), Peru's national cocktail, is the menu's most popular item. The frothy, egg-white layer on top is dashed with Angostura bitters, lending the citrusy spirit a savory taste. THE CHOLOPOLITAN ($10), a Cosmo-inspired pink confection made with passion fruit juice, mercifully skews more toward fruit punch than Sexo y la Ciudad.

If the spirit of tequila is embodied in late-night, low-light hotspots like Lolita, what might Boston expect from a pisco-themed establishment? "It's still searching for its American persona," says manager Chris Titus. "But it's inherently complex and sophisticated." With Taranta leading the pack, pisco is poised for a spiritual revival. LINDSEY CANANT

CUPID, HELP ME! Oh Lord, why did I say anything? Now I'm tortured walking by him because I'm too scared of rejection to say hello. I want to slip Billy my number, but someone is always around. I even put a short note into an envelope and had it in my hand. I'd leave it on my seat, but I'm afraid it won't make it to him. Where do I go from here?

Shy gal on the Kingston commuter train strikes again

To the overly friendly waitress at a popular bar in Brighton:

Flirting with a man who comes to your establishment for drinks with his girlfriend is rude and classless. Offering to help him choose a drink, while ignoring his companion, is worse. Couples come for some alone time. Do your job politely, and if you want a nice tip, flirt with a table of single men.

Service call

To the bikers of Boston:

Over the course of two days, on three separate occasions, I was nearly run over by someone biking on the sidewalk. This morning, I witnessed a man nearly experience the same violent death by someone riding the wrong way down the street. Can someone please remind me (and the rest of the city) of the rules? Yes, I realize Boston is not as bike-friendly as it could be, but that doesn't give cyclists the right to do whatever the hell they want. If you're not walking, you're not a pedestrian. For your safety—and mine—follow the rules of the road. When you blow a stop sign, don't flip me off. I'm not the one at fault. Just trying to walk

Bark With Bite

As the label implies, the Western Mass.–based Berkshire Bark isn't a line of conventional candy bars. These half-inch-thick slabs of custom-blended Callebaut milk and dark chocolate are riddled with rough-chopped fruits, nuts and spices that pack bold flavor and, in several cases, serious bite. Mexican chocolate fans shouldn't miss the cayenne- and ancho-laced Tropical Heat. For a buzz beyond the sugar high, try Jumpin' Java—caffeinated with espresso toffee and caramelized cocoa nibs.

HARD-KNOCK LIFE

Boxing and violent crime in a coming-of-age novel

AS THE SON OF DAMAGED and damaging parents, Aiden O'Connor walks a conflicted path. He finds an outlet for his anger in boxing, which focuses his energy but sometimes turns up the heat of his rage. Nevertheless, his coach believes in him, encouraging him to turn pro. Meanwhile, South Boston's criminal world beckons in the form of Aiden's brother Liam, who makes him an accomplice in drug-dealing and other ventures that bring dreams of material gain. On the job, Aiden gets to know violence and murder. Once, while learning the trade, he puts razor blades to a man's tongue.

A Kid From Southie
By John "Red" Shea and Michael Harmon

The story takes place in South Boston.

The countervailing tug—decency, honesty—is promoted by Angel, his Cuban girlfriend, and by a teacher who counsels him by invoking the Golden Rule, acknowledging that there are other choices and better roads to travel. As Aiden's friend and blood-brother Tommy becomes more entrenched in actual blood, Aiden sees the ominous handwriting on the wall. Other dark surprises act paradoxically, providing inspiration to change his ways, and the novel's gritty darkness is leavened with heartening jumps toward redemption. ✖✖✖

"I looked at him and realized the only thing worse than an enemy was somebody who pretended to be a friend.

'The only thing I'm going to do is make your life hell, you prick,' I said. 'I'm going to own Southie one day, and you know what? You're mine. I'll ruin you.'

He nodded. 'Put the gun away.'

I stared at him every fiber in me begging to pull the trigger.

'I hate you. Both of you,' I said. Then I left."

KIDS IN TOW

Ocean Edge Resort is a haven for the young and excessively restless.

COASTING BY The Nickerson Family Mansion and Ocean Terrace overlook Cape Cod Bay.

THE QUANDARY OF vacationing with young children lies in the verb. It's from the Latin "vacare," to be unoccupied, but anyone who's spent time with young children knows this is laughably, pitiably impossible. Kids are the definition of occupying. Your best hope is to take them somewhere like Ocean Edge Resort & Golf Club in Brewster, where even the most ADD-ridden families can while away a weekend without once resorting to video games.

Driving up a sward dotted with croquet wickets, past a 19th-century carriage house to the door of the "Nickerson Family Mansion," it's hard not to think of Newport. A Gilded Age spirit infuses the foyer, with its oil paintings and winged armchairs, but a giant bowl of candy and the smell of fresh muffins lend a familial touch. Stepping out the rear doors into the Ocean Terrace restaurant lands guests in a modern outdoor bar that wouldn't offend a decorator from Miami. It overlooks a painterly vista of Cape Cod Bay (toddlers won't plunge thanks to a stone balustrade), and you can watch the sunset while listening to the rhythmic thwack of tennis balls in the courts below.

Although the resort offers lots of accommodation options, kids are best kept in the private villas. These come with up to three bedrooms, a modern kitchen and extra bathrooms, as well as broad swathes of living space to festoon with Legos. Best, the villas are within steps of three outdoor swimming pools for chlorinated entertainment. In the afternoons, staffers lead waterlogged kids in poolside craft activities, while evenings bring outdoor movie screenings.

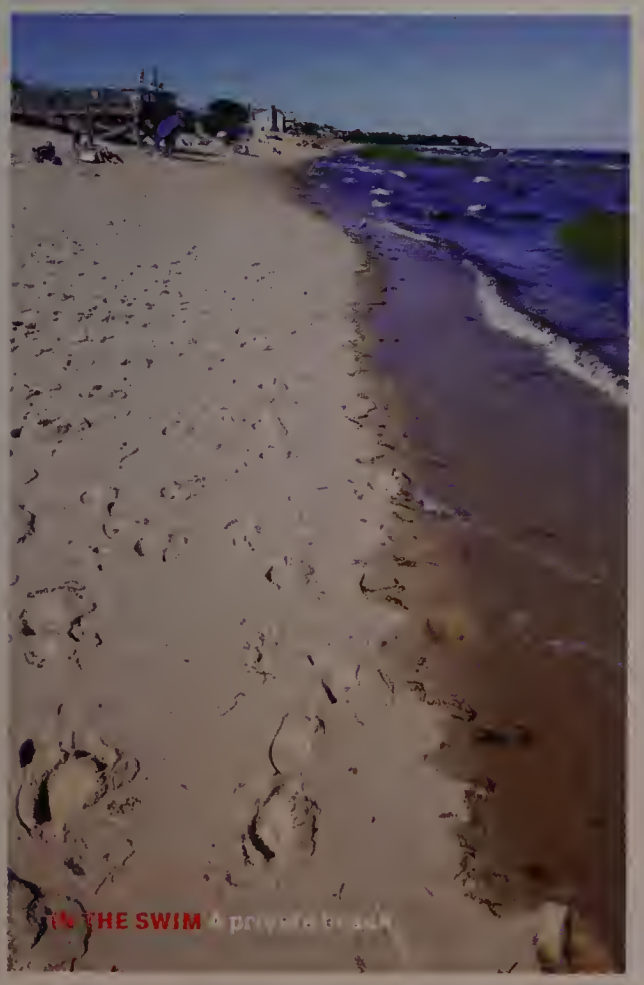
But the real draw is the private beach, reached by a short boardwalk behind the villas.

✓ Traveler's Checks

Unless you have a particular taste for cozy seaside villages, Brewster can be safely ignored. On-site diversions like junior golf will keep kids busy for days.

No need to bring a bike to use the extensive trails. Rentals are available.

Construction begins this winter on a $2-million fitness center.



Laura Methia; terrace: Bryce Vickmark

Unless you've packed weaponry, a beach at low tide is possibly the safest place in the world to let a child run amok. Heavy, saturated sand is ideal for sculpting, and the sea is amply stocked with amusing crabs. At high tide, there's the primal thrill of throwing colorful rocks into the surf, while on summer evenings, the staff builds bonfires and provides the workings for s'mores.

Exhausted parents can find relief in Camp Ocean EdgeVenture, a clubhouse where counselors lead young guests in more swimming, crafts and outdoorsy diversions like collecting innocent shellfish. They even feed the kids lunch. The club abuts an 18-hole Nicklaus Design golf course, so it's convenient for dropping the tots off before tee time. Or you can just sink yourself in the adjoining pool while your offspring savage the jungle gym out of earshot.

There's no need to run out for Happy Meals. Ocean Terrace sports a superb kids' menu with dishes like petite filet mignon for precocious gourmands, or mac 'n' cheese for traditionalists. The chocolate mousse—as dense as a collapsed star—is the stuff of juvenile dreams. Downstairs, Bayzo's Pub is a clubby spot with leather armchairs, mahogany and pizza, as well as a grand line of burgers and sandwiches. While the kids get noisy with the pool table, there's a long, brass-railed bar at which parents can take cocktail therapy before bedtime. Afterward, a stroll back to the villas settles young spirits with the calming sea air. ✖✖✖

THE ADJUSTMENT BUREAU Traditional dishes tweaked, like mussels in a New Orleans BBQ broth

THE CITY GAINED AN inviting new destination with the recent opening of Blue Inc. Executive chef/owner Jason Santos, formerly of Gargoyles on the Square, has brought his considerable talents and delight in culinary risk-taking from Somerville to a financial district boîte just steps from the Greenway. Usually, the gambles succeed.

On my first visit, I enjoyed a generous portion of fresh Prince Edward Island mussels ($9) in a spicy "New Orleans BBQ" broth. The Big Easy bouillon combined with lovage and grilled lemon to make one of the more memorable renditions of this menu staple I've enjoyed in some time. Crunchy griddled bread gave the dish enough heft to stand alone as supper, especially after snacking from the breadbasket stocked with delicious pretzel rolls and mustard butter. As a nightcap, I ordered the Cheffy ($8), one of Blue Inc.'s creative cocktails. Out came a snifter of Grand Marnier, the orange liqueur slowly eroding a "big blue rock" of blueberry-flavored water. While accompanying "orange glitter" could suggest otherwise, the cocktail was well balanced and careful to let flavor outshine presentation.

On a second visit, three friends and I began our night with the Boston Bibb salad ($8), a mountain of tender leaves tossed with a honey-truffle dressing and studded with blue cheese, candied walnuts and red flame grapes—an elegant intertwining of sweet and pungent flavors. The surprisingly light hand-rolled potato gnocchi ($9) arrived in a delectable sauce of lamb sausage, charred broccoli rabe, pequillo peppers and Parmesan. It's a preparation that can match up to any pasta dish in town. Calamari "spaghetti" ($10), one of Santos' flights of fancy, featured finely julienned strands of squid dressed in a "pastrami bolognese," the delicatessen favorite finding a home in unfamiliar surroundings. Adding complexity were successful experiments in garlic-bread puree and salt-cod espuma. The only disappointment among the appetizers was a slow-cooked, dried-out Kurobuta pork belly ($12).

sauce, bitter wilted greens, a refreshing avocado salad and celery root mousseline. Often an item chosen by the indifferent, grilled salmon ($24) was perked up with English peas, parsnips and tiger shrimp butter. Seemingly in an attempt to lighten a heavy dish, the kitchen paired braised veal cheeks ($25) with watermelon tartare and frisée salad, though the scales tipped to richness with the addition of potato puree. Pan-seared scallops ($23), perhaps the most memorable of the mains, starred four luscious sea scallops enhanced by a supporting cast of fresh and freeze-dried corn, chorizo emulsion and a soft-boiled egg lightly breaded and flash-fried—a creative and expertly executed tour de force.

The enhancements continued into dessert, as the brown-butter-and-brandy–poached peach clafoutis ($9) avoided the doughy, cake batter–like character sometimes found in this treat. The addition of peach ice cream and an almond crumble made it the standout sweet. Besides cocktails, Blue Inc. offers a limited selection of beers and a slightly better selection of wines, including a Laurent Kraft chenin blanc ($34) with a restrained touch of sweetness and a slight effervescence, and a Château Pey La Tour cabernet-merlot blend ($28), which played to mixed reviews. When the draft beer system is up and running—sadly out of service on my visits due to apparent technical problems—it will complement an inviting array of bar snacks, including killer corn dogs (6 for $9) served with three dipping sauces.

Santos has made the transition from Davis Square to downtown seem effortless. Once the entire staff hits a level of consistency worthy of the imaginative cuisine, Blue Inc. may have the competition green with envy. ✖✖✖

DRESSED UP

On Aug. 25, the Putnam Boston Equestrian Classic, featuring a show-jumping demonstration, was held in Boston Common to benefit the Friends of the Boston Park Rangers Mounted Unit. Afterward, 150 people attended the reception at the Taj Boston, where they raised more than $30,000.

Stores citywide participated in "Fashion's Night Out Boston." On Sept. 8, runway shows at Copley Place featured looks from Neiman Marcus and other retailers for an audience of 200. The event collected hundreds of accessories for Dress for Success.

One...

One year ago this month we opened our doors at Strega Waterfront, and what an exciting and unforgettable year it has been.

From our incredible opening night to a memorable summer season, everything came together perfectly to make YOUR restaurant a true success. All of that would have never been possible without the love and respect our wonderful city has shown us. We appreciate your continued patronage and we are honored that you've made us your home.

In a city famous for its winning teams, we all know that reaching the top is impossible without a dedicated and talented STAFF. It's certainly not easy becoming number one, but with the loyalty and hard work of our Strega Family, you have all made it seem so effortless.

From the bottom of my heart, I'd like to thank each and every one of you. We wouldn't be here without you.

Here's to many more years to come!

SHOWING THE MONEY

Vulgar ostentation in Pebble Beach

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

BOSTON HAS ITS SHARE OF rich people. I once met a bodyguard whose job entailed following a BU girl to class because she was worth $750 million. But in Boston, money keeps a low profile. The secret gardens on Beacon Hill are a perfect metaphor for the New England attitude toward wealth—from the street, you've no idea of the lavishness that's behind those walls. If you have money here, you're usually not a dick about it.

That is not the case in Pebble Beach, Calif. At least, not during the annual car show that I attended last month. Pebble Beach is a fascinating petri dish of humanity. This isn't how the other half lives. It's how the other half of the other half of the other half of the other half lives.

As you quickly perceive in Pebble Beach, super-rich people are easily bored. That, coupled with the competitive urge to one-up your peers, leads to extreme eccentricity. You're taking a limo to the party? Well, I'm taking a hot air balloon towed by a team of eunuchs!

That didn't really happen, as far as I know. But I did go to a party where a guy brought a parrot. And another guy showed up on a Segway and rode it around indoors. And another guy showed me his $700,000 watch, which I knew was a $700,000 watch because he told me.

When I first saw Parrot Man, I figured he was some sort of entertainer. This impression was supported by the fact that he was wearing a robe of the finest silk and pointy shoes. The getup screamed "middle-aged white guy on his way to a Halloween party dressed as Aladdin." Did I mention that this was a middle-aged white guy? With a parrot.

I kept waiting for the parrot performance to begin, but when I asked around I learned that this guy was just some dude, and that bringing a parrot is his signature thing. Over the course of the night, I never heard the parrot talk, but I imagine it knows how to say, "I have a pathological need for attention because my parents didn't love me, AWWWK!"

Attention-seeking connects many Pebble Beachers. The impulse that causes you to paint a Rolls-Royce purple or bright yellow (I saw both) is the same one that compels you to ride a Segway into the middle of a shoulder-to-shoulder party. When I first spotted Segway Guy, his assistant was clearing a path for him through the crowd, and I thought, "Well, he must be handicapped. Because nobody could possibly harbor such a crushing need for acknowledgement that they'd ride a Segway up to the buffet table at a crowded party."

But then I started thinking about it. What kind of disability would render you able to stand for hours but not walk into a room? And consider the context: There's a guy over there wearing genie shoes with a parrot on his shoulder, so how are you going to trump that? Maybe by riding around on your gyro-scooter like a seven-foot-tall bionic dork.

Finally, there was Watch Guy. "Guess how much this watch costs," he said. "I don't know, $50,000?" I replied. "No," he said. "It's $700,000. Well, not quite. $690,000." With that line, Watch Guy flawlessly executed the biggest humble brag in the history of humble brags—you know, he wouldn't pay 700 grand for a piece of man jewelry. Just 690.

I took a photo of the six-figure wristwear and e-mailed it to my friend Greg, a watch aficionado, to find out if Watch Guy was telling the truth. Greg wrote back that the watch was legit, adding, "Seems like an awesome guy with a huge wang. Hopefully you got to hang out with him for most of the weekend. No doubt there were hot chicks hovering around." Strangely, there were not.

I heard more mind-boggling stories over the weekend, like the one about the guy who ordered a fully loaded Rolls and, upon receiving the $750,000 invoice, sent it back in a fit of pique—he wanted them to make it more expensive so that the price would begin with an eight.

New England has its idiosyncratic tycoons, too. But ours do cool stuff like buy sports teams and make them competitive. That said, I do think that the Boston masters of the universe could learn a thing or two at Pebble Beach. I'll bet Fidelity would be a more interesting place if Ned Johnson had a parrot. ✖✖✖

OPENING LINES

How book ideas emerge

I HAD A GREAT INCENTIVE TO write. When I returned home after college, I heard my father say to my mother one night, "He'll never finish a book. It's a pipe dream." Fathers and sons are in eternal, Freudian struggle, no matter how much love is felt. So I began to write a novel while on lunch breaks at the Boston Public Library, at nights in restaurants in longhand, at home on weekends on a Smith Corona portable typewriter. I imitated one of my heroes, JD Salinger, by writing about a protagonist just out of college who loathed himself for selling out and taking a job on Wall Street. Someone just like me. Until I discovered that Wall Street was much more about human emotions, particularly fear and greed, than it was about math. Not to mention it provided a wealth of incredible characters and material.

My first rejection letter said, "Writing in the first person seems so easy to the beginner."

Perhaps the two most important things to remember for a creative life are: 1) Believe in yourself, no matter what anyone else says. 2) Keep puttin' it out there, so others can see it, and maybe, maybe, you'll find that person who "gets it." And gets you.

Novels come from sparks of the imagination, and a novelist's skills can be applied to daily life. I don't mean becoming the Talented Mr. Ripley or faking your résumé. Passions and hobbies can bring you adventures you never thought possible. For instance, my love of writing has led to many memorable encounters, which led to books. One summer, years ago, I was writing in a booth in a suburban steakhouse, happy to eat and scribble in solitude. I ordered a simple steak and baked potato and lost myself in my notepad. But 40 minutes later I looked up and… no food. Annoyed, I did something I never do: I asked to see the manager. He arrived, a rather sweet, overweight, harassed, sweating Briton. I looked at him. "Forty minutes for a steak and a potato?"

He shrugged and held out his hands. Seeing my opening, I went on, "I'm working on a piece about summer dining in New England for a travel magazine…" and let it trail off.

The steak arrived forthwith, as did brandy, coffee and more brandy, with the manager sitting with me in the booth. He told me tales of running hotels in Switzerland, restaurants in London. This sort of encounter is priceless if you like stories and learn from them. Besides, sometimes you have to be inventive if you want service in an increasingly anonymous world.

Proof of this maxim came years later, when my wife and I took our daughter to see Cats for her 13th birthday. We went to Tavern on the Green for dinner. Lo and behold, the steakhouse manager from years ago was now manager of the famous New York eatery.

"Will you write about us?" he gushed. I took out my notebook. He paid for our desserts, comped our birthday daughter and gave us a tour of the restaurant.

"What's next?" my wife said. "The cats take us onstage?"

These encounters triggered an idea that I noodled for a long time. The germ of the idea was that we live in an impersonal world where doctors don't make house calls and plumbers never show up when they promise. The book became Smart People, about how to build your own team of experts, from lawyers to doctors to contractors, who'll respond to you and your family. And all this from a steak dinner that arrived late.

In fiction, the same process applies. You think you have an inspiration. Then the idea cooks, sometimes for years. I was in a mixed marriage: Jew, gentile. But despite my own relationship, I believed that mixed marriages were basically doomed. I thought that marriage under the best of circumstances was difficult. Throwing religious differences at it would make most unions bust in times of stress. This was the theme of my novel, Class. Our marriage lasted. But I haven't changed my basic tune.

I wrote a novel, The Foursome, in the 1990s, but it had been simmering in my mind for years. I kept seeing the same image. I envisioned four boys, about 13 years old, walking away from me, carrying golf bags down a long green fairway. Who are those boys? I thought. Are they caddying? No, they're playing. What are they dreaming about, and what's going to happen to them? That's what I mean about the germ of the idea. Eventually I wrote about them, their friendship and their desire to beat each other into the ground, on the golf course and in life. So much of writing comes from thinking about it, long before you fire up the computer, or, in my case, put pen to the yellow legal pad.

But, as in golf, if you want to write… don't talk about it. Grip it and rip it. ✖✖✖

ON BLEDSOE, MANNING AND 200 WINS

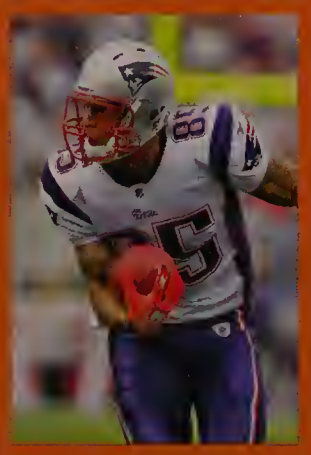
ZONE OUT
Lester has to be hot.

5 PREDICTIONS FOR THE FALL

The Sox Will Lose in the ALDS Nothing can shock me with this team. They could lose in the ALCS, or win the World Series, or miss the playoffs altogether, and I'd understand. But here's my best guess: a first round exit. Depending on who they play, either CJ Wilson or Justin Verlander will set the tone, and unless both Jon Lester and Josh Beckett are in the zone, the Sox will come up shorter than the late great Nelson de la Rosa.

Verlander Will Win the MVP I don't believe in pitchers winning the MVP. Not because I'm against the concept, but because if Pedro wasn't special enough in 1999, no pitcher ever will be. But unfortunately, I don't have a vote, and many of those who do are dolts. I'll say that Verlander wins, Ellsbury comes in second and Carl Crawford sneaks into the running at 353rd.

The Pats Will Start 8-0 If they lost to the Chargers in Week 2 (I'm writing this beforehand), you're having a good laugh at my expense. (Go ahead, soak it in, jerk.) But if not, heed my call: The Pats won't lose until Week 10, Sunday Night Football at the Jets. Which will be followed by Rex Ryan heading home for a celebratory session of Sunday Night Foot-to-Balls.



The Bruins Start Slow They'll win the opener, but after that there's an adjustment period. Every night will be the other team's Stanley Cup, as there's an 82-game bull's eye on the Bruins' back. (Plus, it'll take at least a month for all the off-season booze to officially exit Brad Marchand's system.) They'll be fine, but just not right away.

There Will Be No Basketball At least I'm guaranteed to be right about something, because man oh man, is the NBA in trouble. I'm not ready to say the whole season's lost, but you have a better chance of seeing KG and Charlie Villanueva kiss on the mouth than you do of seeing an NBA game before Christmas.

1 ONE LONG OVERDUE OCCASION

Congratulations to Tim Wakefield for completing the long arduous journey to 200 wins. Congrats to all of us for not having to withstand another failed attempt. And by the way, seven more wins* and he's got the franchise record. Let's start another countdown! *ETA: 2017

2 WOULD YOU RATHERS

Gronkowski or Hernandez? One game, and you only get one: Which freak of nature do you want? I guess if you're looking for a classic tight end, it doesn't get much better than Gronk, but I'll take Hernandez. He's got more moves than MC Hammer (you kids still listen to Hammer, right?), and he's only getting better.

Here's a Tough One Would you rather have a postgame/pre-shower Vince Wilfork sit on your head for 10 minutes, OR play goalie for 10 Zdeno Chara slapshots... but you're not allowed to wear a helmet or pads. Choose, but choose wisely. (I'm on Team Wilfork.)

3 ENEMY INVASIONS

Missing Manning Thought I'd be happy to see Peyton Manning go down for (maybe) the season, but turns out I kind of miss him. You know, like you'd miss a nosy neighbor, an annoying officemate, or... don't make this awkward, just come back you goofy bastard.

Saving Sandman I'm typing this the day after Mariano Rivera earned his 600th career save. By the time you read this, he'll probably own baseball's all-time record. And you know what? Good for him. Since those four nights in October, I can't be bothered by any of those guys. So go ahead and set every record in the book, Mo. We'll always have 2004.

All Apologies Eric Mangini's sorry about SpyGate. In a recent interview, he said, "My intention was never to hurt [Belichick] or the Patriots." Aw, really? That's so sweet of you, Eric. But that's also an enormous load of crap. What other intention could there have been?

4 DATES TO WATCH

9/23: Ten years ago today, Mo Lewis crushed Drew Bledsoe and changed the world forever. On that note: We're all very old.

9/28: It's Game No. 162 for the Sox. Or, as JD Drew calls it, Game No. 80. (Sorry, guys. Have to get them in while I can. Another month or so, and he's gone forever!)

10/1: The Bruins take on the Islanders in the final game of the preseason, and you know what comes after that! That's right... four days off. But after that?

10/2: The Pats head west to tangle with Al Davis' Ralders. Says Davis: "Been fightin' Patriots since the Revolutionary War, I'll be damned if I'm stoppin' now!"

"There's more

Soroff On TONY MAWS

This year's winner of the James Beard Award for Best Chef, Northeast talks about fame, roast chicken and Yelp.

BORN AND RAISED IN NEWTON, TONY MAWS, 39, is the James Beard Award–winning chef/owner of Cambridge restaurant Craigie On Main. Known as an "idealist with a kitchen," he's an outspoken advocate of local sourcing and nose-to-tail eating. After earning a BA in psychology from the University of Michigan, Maws worked with such culinary giants as Ken Oringer, Steve Johnson, Bernard Constantin, Roland Passot, Wolfgang Puck and Mark Miller, but he credits Chris Schlesinger of East Coast Grill with giving him his first big break. After opening Craigie Street Bistrot, he was named one of America's top new chefs by Food & Wine, but he outgrew the restaurant and moved to a larger space on Main Street in 2008. He lives with his wife, Karolyn, and their son, Charlie, in Cambridge.

Jonathan Soroff: So do you feel like a pioneer in the whole locavore and nose-to-tail movement?

Tony Maws: No, not really. I think our grandmothers were doing the same thing for hundreds or thousands of years. There's more to an animal than just a tenderloin, and it's not only the lack of waste but a respect for the animal, not to mention that a lot of these things just taste really good. In terms of eating locally, take a tomato from your backyard garden and compare it to one that was grown 3,000 miles away and had to be gassed in order to ship it. It's a no-brainer to put the most delicious things possible on the plate.

So what do you throw away?
There are certain parts that I can't even get. If I were to buy a whole veal, they couldn't send me the head because they're not certified to do that. So there really isn't anything that I wouldn't use, but I can't get certain things.

Most important thing when cooking?
Be humble. You can rely on past experience as a guide, but there're no laws. Inevitably, you're going to screw up. We're trying to achieve perfection while knowing it's not possible, and that's sort of masochistic but it's a part of the fun, too.

Pet peeve with customers?
One is when people feel that because they're in a restaurant they can treat the staff like inferiors. We're not slaves. The other is when people claim to have an allergy but really just don't like a certain ingredient, or even worse, when they have the allergy but don't mention it. I had a guy do a six-course tasting menu, and there was a shrimp course. He ended up passed out and being carried out by an ambulance, and I was like, "Why didn't you say something?" He said, "It just sounded so delicious!"

How do you feel about Yelp and other sites where people with an axe to grind can affect a restaurant's business?
I appreciate that there is a forum for people to talk about things they're passionate about, but the point to which it's empowered them is sort of problematic. They're hiding behind a curtain and throwing sucker punches. If you didn't like your meal, tell me in the restaurant. I'll comp your meal. I'll give you a gift certificate. My job is to make you happy, so say something then and there.

McDonald's or Burger King?
Neither. I haven't eaten at either in over a decade. I can make a better french fry. I can make a better hamburger.

Anyone you'd like to poison?
No way am I answering that. There's one person out there who knows nothing about me, has never met me and yet enjoys writing negative things about me. I have no idea why. But I'll leave it at that.

Thoughts on becoming famous?
On one level, it's nice to be recognized for your hard work. At the same time, going beyond that isn't really for me. I'm not looking to be on TV. I'm a cook, and I like doing it. But the only real downside to it is that there are all these young people who think it's this high-glamour quotient, and they've signed up for the wrong reasons or with false expectations.

What will I always find in your refrigerator?
Vietnamese fish sauce, a variety of hot sauces, mustards, miso…

One thing everyone should know how to cook?
Something that makes them happy and doesn't intimidate them. Everyone should know how to roast a whole chicken. It has a lot more flavor and will go a lot further than processed parts out of a container.

Favorite kitchen implement?
At home, a pressure cooker. It's easy. It's electric. You don't lose a lot of flavor or nutrients.

Favorite spice?
Mexican chiles or pimentos from the Basque region.

Favorite herb?
Depends on my mood. Thyme is literally put into everything at Craigie On Main.

Any ingredient you resent?
White sugar kinda bums me out. Both the process of making it and the stuff itself. I'm using more and more natural sugars, demerara sugars, muscovado sugars and even agave nectar in a lot of things.

Unlikely food pairing you've invented?
Pork heart and sea urchin.

Thoughts on food writers?
Obviously, some have a better understanding of food than others. I'm not trying to cook for the masses, and some people won't enjoy our food. But I feel badly for some of the critics. They're kind of a dying breed.

Favorite ethnic cuisine?
We're all ethnic in one way or another. I miss my grandmother's cooking, so traditional Jewish cooking. A bowl of great Japanese noodles makes me happy. I love them all.

Do you ever get sick of looking at and thinking about food?
[Laughs.] No, I don't. There are parts of my job I get sick of. There's a lot to running a restaurant besides cooking, and anything that takes me away from that I kind of resent. I say this without spite, but if you're a chef de cuisine and not the owner, you get to cook a lot more food than I do these days. ✖✖✖

A NEW STANDARD

TASTEMAKERS PROVE THAT REMAKES CAN BEAT ORIGINALS.

By Kyle Wright / Photographs by Emily Knudsen

We tend to overlook the dishes that define our gastronomic heritage, sidelining Olde New England for the latest trend. And with good reason—left to the touristy spots that created them, dishes like Boston cream pie and clam chowder are yesterday's chews. So we challenged six ministers of taste to reinvent the standards and remind us why these dishes have endured the test of time.

For our reinvented recipes, visit improper.com

CLAM CHOWDER

Whether they're waiting for a table at the Union Oyster House or slurping Legal Sea Foods' president-approved stew, tourists love clam chowder. It's also one of the few Boston classics to which natives are equally addicted. At Journeyman, chefs Diana Kudajarova and Tse Wei Lim revisit this old-school soup with their trademark elegance. Bacon consommé amps up the porkiness, and the addition of oysters gives a meatier bite. "Cream usually beats up the brine," Kudajarova says. "The oysters bring that back." Baked crumbles made from instant mashed potatoes replace your plastic bag of oyster crackers.

Nelson Paz, executive pastry chef at Mandarin Oriental, Boston

BOSTON CREAM PIE

If Nelson Paz wasn't a pastry chef, he'd be an architect. Whether he's creating a tower of strawberry shortcake at Asana or a perfect square of lemon pavlova on Top Chef Just Desserts, his building-block style allows you to taste each flavor individually before smashing them all together. For his spin on Boston cream pie, Paz kept the profiles classic but reimagined the execution. "If it wasn't chocolate, pastry cream and white cake, it'd be a different dessert," he says. His micro–sponge cake takes a nutty sweetness from almond flour, while smooth vanilla-custard cream is formed into a cylinder and sprayed with chocolate. "The flavors are familiar and easy to replicate. That's why it's been popular for so long."

Chris Gould, chef at Uni

NEW ENGLAND LOBSTER BAKE

You don't need a plastic bib to enjoy Chris Gould's modern Japanese spin on this summer staple. "I don't limit myself to strict ingredients," Gould says. "Taking the flavors of classical dishes and reinventing them is what I do here every day." His Maine lobster sashimi is dressed in a light and tangy soy-yuzu sauce and is plated up alongside smoked clam and corn salad. Dots of spicy lobster-coral emulsion add heat, but it's the potatoes that lend intrigue. Crisped chunks contrast with the lobster's tender bite and a puréed spud even finds its way into the salad dressing. The tastes evoke a warm August afternoon—a last wisp of summer on the autumn menu.

It has notes of coriander, garlic and paprika,
with added texture
from hanger steak.

FENWAY FRANK

Since hot dogs and baseball go hand in glove, the Fenway Frank is an iconic Boston delicacy that's more about the ambience than the gustatory experience. Fenway Park uses Kayem dogs, but store-bought links won't suffice for Ten Tables' Sean Callahan. The restaurant regularly features hearty house-made sausages, but Callahan didn't want to wander too far from his inspiration. "If I'm going to Fenway, I'm definitely eating a hot dog and having a beer," he says. His invention has notes of coriander, garlic and paprika, with added texture from mixing hanger steak and pork. Served on a griddled bun with plenty of house-made sweet relish and a dollop of spicy Dijon, it's a palpable hit.

BOSTON BAKED BEANS

Baked beans are possibly the least glamorous food ever created, but in the hands of Menton's Colin Lynch, there's no hint of the soupy, canned fodder. He swaps the mushy brown specks for heartier black-eyed peas, adding substantial bite. Cider vinegar perks up the mix and house-made heirloom tomato jam provides a less cloying sweetness than does molasses. Playing on the pork 'n' beans theme, chunks of crisped bacon give the dish its salt and a slice of panko-fried headcheese serves as a finishing crown. "There's definitely a Southern influence," Lynch says, "but none of these flavors are too new or surprising. It's just working it a little bit into something else."

Many cocktail historians say the Ward 8 was invented in the late 1800s, but Brother Cleve concurs with cocktail historian David Wondrich's guess that it's a more recent creation. "People really weren't using grenadine in cocktails until around 1910," the bartending legend says at Think Tank, his Monday and Tuesday post. Grenadine plays an important role in both Locke-Ober's original spin on the whiskey sour and in Cleve's new rendition—but he skips the bottled plonk. Cleve makes his own syrup with raw sugar, orange flower water and Pom Wonderful. And thanks to Grand Marnier and lemon bitters, his version replaces kiddie–fruit-juice flavors with more sophisticated notes. Cleve calls it the Ward 1840, after the Pierre Ferrand cognac he's swapped in for rye. The result is less sweet than its predecessor, making it softer, balanced and refined.

BY 10 PM ON MOST nights, the plate-glass windows of the Boston Center for Adult Education have gone dark. But at midnight one evening last March, they glowed brighter than Tom Cruise's teeth. Inside, the swarm of bodies wasn't there for a late-night class, though there were lessons to be learned. Chef Mary Dumont, for example, wanted to know how she was going to get her next course out to the hungry guests. Brian Poe was wondering who could help him plate food (Joanne Chang stepped up). And Dante de Magistris was curious about exactly who was going to be washing the dishes (answer: him). "It was one of those situations where everyone pitched in and did whatever they had to do to pull off the night," recalls Will Gilson. "They just rallied."

The reason those chefs—plus nine more—had banded together? Gilson himself. The event was a dinner for 200 people, cooked by a cadre of volunteer chefs, to raise money for Gilson's mom, a farmer whose greenhouse (and simultaneously, livelihood) had collapsed during last winter's snowstorms. The event raised $30,000 ($10,000 over goal). Not bad, considering it had been tossed together at the last-minute by Gilson and fellow chefs Louie DiBiccari and Jamie Bissonnette. After Gilson e-mailed his well-connected friends, he woke up the next morning to see thousands of dollars had already poured into a PayPal account. DiBiccari and Bissonnette pitched in by spreading the word on social media, and within a matter of weeks, made the fund-raiser happen by bringing together an unlikely dream team of restaurant/food industry forces who turned the BCAE into a makeshift restaurant.

BISSONNETTE, DIBICCARI and Gilson are well known for the dishes they've created. They're also notorious for dressing up in farm-animal costumes and Hello Kitty pajamas in public, for riding around on scooters in a self-proclaimed "gang" and staging mock press conference Web videos—among other amusing, pointless juvenilia. But their penchant for creating restaurants in nontraditional spaces is their chief distinction.

Most obvious is Chef Louie Night, a series of roving events that take the old Iron Chef platform and mashes it up with an underground dining concept. DiBiccari and a few pals invented it eight years ago—originally to meet girls—and now it's one of his biggest cash cows. Then there's Gilson. Since leaving his four-year post at Garden at the Cellar last year, he's made peripateticism into a culinary art form via his company, Eat, which creates pop-up restaurants everywhere, from the South End to Cape Cod. Bissonnette is the most sedentary of the crew. He's a fixture at Chef Louie Night competitions, but is usually found at the brick-and-mortar entities (Coppa, Toro, and K.O. Prime) he helms for chef Ken Oringer.

Their off-the-grid restaurants, however, belie a more profound development. These three guys are the new guard of Boston's chef network, not just for their cooking skills (though they're undoubtedly refined), their varied eateries or even their costumed, scooter-mounted publicity stunts. It's the attitude underlying all of the above that's subtly moving them toward the core of Boston's restaurant culture, and is influencing the way other chefs approach the craft.

TALKING WITH THE TRIO is like wandering around the conversational equivalent of an M.C. Escher print—if said master had surreptitiously strewn his staircases with barbed wire.

Crowding around a bar (which is often where you'll find them), they swap zingers, stories about pranks and things they've done that are just plain weird. Topics change faster than most chefs can dice up a scallion. "Remember when I gave you my beard?" DiBiccari asks Gilson. "Shaved off and cryovaced, yes," replies Gilson, "as a birthday present last year. I think I just threw it away a month ago." Bissonnette jumps in to console him. "At least he didn't give you a broken rib," he says. That's precisely what happened the time Bissonnette was riding shotgun with DiBiccari in the backseat behind him. DiBiccari decided to open an umbrella and pin Bissonnette's head back with it. Bissonnette, with his full sleeves of ink and quasi-Coke-bottle glasses, looks like a librarian trapped in a carnie's body. He's not exactly an easy mark.

"Jamie responds by pulling the seat release and the recliner simultaneously—a total ninja move," says DiBiccari, not without admiration. "Then he breaks the umbrella in half, pounds me two times, and breaks two ribs." Bissonnette chuckles. "It was like playing Whac-A-Mole," he adds. "But the mole was Louis."

This all seems more Jackass than James Beard, but the twain have actually met. When Gilson was cooking as a guest chef at the esteemed Beard House in New York—one of the top honors a chef can receive—he brought his friends. Bissonnette decided to convince Gilson's sous chef that the dinner had been moved up two hours. "He's running around, freaking out, asking everyone how they can be so calm." The three friends sat back, in one of the most venerable culinary institutions in the country, and relished the poor man's panic.

DESPITE THE FRAT-BOY nature of such antics, the impact these chefs are having on Boston's restaurant culture is genuine. "The best thing about the boys is they're not afraid to look like they're having fun," says Garrett Harker, the man behind Eastern Standard and a co-owner of Island Creek Oyster Bar. "The last two generations of Boston chefs wrung their hands in anxiety at the thought of appearing anything less than super-serious. Maybe that's because they felt they were representing Boston as a food town to be taken seriously, or [because of] the more formal white-tablecloth restaurants of the time."

Ten years ago, the inner circle of local, big-name chefs—Todd English, Jasper White, Ming Tsai, Lydia Shire, Andy Husbands—used to be cheekily billed by the media as the Boston Kitchen Mafia. Back then, as much as certain chefs may have liked one another personally, it was every chef for him- or herself on the business and media front. Moreover, in many cases, the bigger you got, the more you needed to watch your back for competition. As the new mafia sees it, that's ancient philosophy. The new definition is inclusive, and you protect anyone in the circle as if your own career depended on it. Case in point: Last year when chef Tony Susi had no one to staff his kitchen at Sage, chef Dante De Magistris left his own restaurant to work Susi's line. "There's a group of us that knows we'll do whatever it takes to be there for each other," DiBiccari says. "When I left Sel de la Terre after 12 years, it was that group of friends that kept me afloat. They let me pay for nothing, and helped me get great jobs. Of course, that's because we're friends, but also there's a practicality, too. If Jamie does better in his career, I'll do better in mine. I totally believe that. And sure, a certain level of competition drives us all to get better. But these days, many of us try as hard as we can to do that without knocking other people down."

Restaurant entrepreneur Christopher Myers of Myers + Chang, Radius and Via Matta has watched the trio's effect on chef culture. "Their humor and bonhomie inspired other chefs to take themselves a little less seriously. They just are what they are, and that's infectious."

The impact of chefs like these means that the business of feeding people is becoming less about pride, and more about fun. This translates well to the dining room—whether it results in intentionally playful dishes, a more festive atmosphere or more interactive dining. Eating in a restaurant is more enjoyable when the people in the kitchen are having a blast, and when camaraderie trumps ego. ✖✖✖

"Mix the expected with the unexpected."

"Risk taking and thinking out of the box are key. Wear a T-shirt backward if the neckline looks better, or if a tablecloth looks appropriate for an occasion, wear it!"

"I find that dressing with a sense of humor draws people to me. It makes me more accessible to different types of people and consequently opens my world."

"I don't think I'll ever be too old to have fun with fashion. I'm no spring chicken now, but I intend to be a very odd old lady."

"I don't divide my clothes into everyday and dress wear. I may be in Shaw's in an outfit one day and wear a variation of it to a wedding the next."

"Sometimes I'm the only person over the age of 19 shopping at a store. The sales associates don't know what to make of me."

"I'm kind of a sock freak. If I see a great pair, I have to buy them."

Girl Meets Ahoy! In the '40s and '50s, Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein had a knack for creating musicals that stand the test of time. Half a century later, the duo's works still draw in audiences for shows they know by heart. The story of an American nurse working on a naval base in Polynesia, South Pacific is their grand tale of love, colonialism and prejudice against the backdrop of war. Marcelo Guzzo, Katie Reid and Robert John Biedermann star in a revival of the musical at the Boston Opera House Sept. 27–Oct. 2.

Bellflower ★★★ Girls, be careful how you break up with a guy who owns his own flamethrower. This angsty missive from the broken heart of dude nation is the story of love gone wrong with an apocalyptic twist. Writer/director Evan Glodell's debut is stubbornly original and sometimes just plain stubborn. It's confounding, but there's something extremely personal happening here. The film stars Glodell as Woodrow, a 20-something slacker who is, like everybody else in this universe, a raging alcoholic. Enter Milly (Jessie Wiseman), a bad news kind of gal who wins Woodrow's heart after beating him in the local tavern's cricket-eating contest. She's obviously nothing but trouble, but at least she tries to warn him first. Shot on handmade digital cameras, the photography drifts in and out of focus with a thick coat of grime smeared across the lens. The film's sheer ugliness is paradoxically beautiful to behold. It's a raw, emotionally honest depiction of heartbreak as a personal apocalypse, which I suppose might sound silly if you haven't had your heart broken lately. (At Kendall Square.)

Captain America: The First Avenger ★★★ ½ Just when I thought I never wanted to see another superhero movie, the summer's most delightful surprise arrives with this cornball throwback in which local boy Chris Evans finally makes good. At the start of World War II, Evans' digitally-shrunken weakling Steve Rogers gets injected with a superserum that transforms him into a shining beacon of War Bond propaganda. Captain America is overflowing with a gee-whiz sense of wonder and gorgeously retro set designs. The movie is as square as Evans' jaw, but that only adds to the charm. The Nazis now have rocket ships and laser guns, and each individual sepia-toned set-piece is overscaled with pulp abandon. Director Joe Johnston's eager-to-please naiveté hasn't really found a home in blockbuster-land since 1991's The Rocketeer, but this is the right material for the right filmmaker. From here on out, every superhero movie needs to have Tommy Lee Jones on the sidelines, barking insults the way only Tommy Lee Jones can. (In the suburbs.)

Contagion ★★ ½ Working once again in grand canvas Traffic mode, director Steven Soderbergh's chilling pandemic procedural follows a killer strain of the flu from Gwyneth Paltrow's hacking cough to the far corners of the globe, leaving 12 million people and dozens of Academy Award winners dead in its wake. Soderbergh is a model craftsman fascinated by process, but sometimes he can be a bit too clinical and bloodless for his own good. Ironically, what makes Contagion so effective also turns out to be its undoing, as the movie's stubborn refusal to provide conventional Hollywood payoffs makes it easy to respect and difficult to love. Matt Damon provides the few moments of emotional ballast as a suddenly single dad functioning as our audience surrogate. The first 40 minutes are exceptional, but as the disease spreads, the screenplay stretches itself too thin over too many characters and storylines. It's an expertly mounted, emotionally remote film. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Cowboys & Aliens ★ ½ I just had to travel back in time to break the news to my nine-year-old self that James Bond and Indiana Jones teaming up to fight space-lizards in the Old West isn't the awesomest movie in the history of the world. Boasting five credited screenwriters, a raft of story-by credits and bearing little resemblance to the comic book from which it takes its title, director John Favreau's misjudged genre-bender treats a schlocky premise with humorless solemnity. Daniel Craig's Man With No Name wakes up with an alien bracelet and no memory, earning the ire of Harrison Ford's crusty cattle baron. Then UFO's attack, leaving the two to out-gruff each other and start a posse to rescue everyone from a spaceship. The movie is grindingly violent, and it unforgivably refuses to remark upon the irony of white settlers having to team up with an Apache tribe to rescue their land from an occupying force seeking to pilfer resources and commit genocide. (At Somerville Theatre.)

Crazy, Stupid, Love ★★★ Unlike other freaky-deaky method actors like Sean Penn and Nicolas Cage, Ryan Gosling happens to look like a movie star, and this too-carefully structured romantic comedy benefits immeasurably from his brand of anarchy. Backing up a bit, the film stars Steve Carell (who also produced) as a middle-aged husband unceremoniously dropped by his childhood sweetheart (Julianne Moore) after she's had an ill-advised dalliance with a co-worker (a smarmy-as-ever Kevin Bacon). Adrift and alone for the first time in his life, Carell takes up residence on a barstool at a demographically unfriendly singles' haunt. The self-pity is enough to interrupt Gosling's idle rich, bar-cruising lothario, and the following makeover is at first a dizzying sort

Brad Pitt and Jonah Hill get their heads in the game.

Moneyball ★★★½
Starring Brad Pitt, Jonah Hill, Philip Seymour Hoffman, Chris Pratt and Robin Wright. Based on the book by Michael Lewis. Screenplay by Steven Zaillian and Aaron Sorkin. Directed by Bennett Miller.

Melinda Sue Gordon/© 2011 Columbia TriStar Marketing Group, Inc.

DESPITE BEING ONE OF the last bankable names in Hollywood, Brad Pitt never seems interested in being a true movie star. Even his highest grossing hits—including oddball anomalies like Quentin Tarantino's Inglorious Basterds or the Coen Brothers' Burn After Reading—seem like they were only able to get made because Pitt is one of the most famous people in the world. Who else could get financing for a film with a title like The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford?

As an actor, Pitt usually tries to play against his looks, uglying it up for a role or adopting self-consciously kooky accents. The Ocean's movies are the only time you'll find him coasting on charm, which is a shame because he happens to be very good at it. But in Bennett Miller's Moneyball, Pitt finally surrenders and turns in the kind of megawatt, charismatic and old-fashioned movie star performance we've all secretly been waiting for. As a pal noted, "He's playing the role exactly the way Robert Redford would've in the 1970s."

Based on Michael Lewis' best seller, Moneyball stars Pitt as Oakland A's general manager Billy Beane, a once-promising player who washed out young. Now he's stuck trying to run a financially crippled franchise in a league where the big teams have gotten so rich that the smaller markets have been priced right out of competition. An opening-title card announcing a playoff game between the New York Yankees and Beane's beleaguered A's slyly replaces the team's names with their payroll budgets, reminding us that what we're really watching is a battle of resources.

> "He's playing the role exactly the way Robert Redford would've in the 1970s."

After losing his superstar sluggers Jason Giambi and Johnny Damon at the end of the 2001 season, Beane's strapped for cash and there aren't a lot of prospects in his price range. His only option is to think outside the box, and a young number cruncher named Peter Brand might be just what he's looking for. Played by an uncharacteristically subdued Jonah Hill, the kid is obsessed with sabermetrics. A then-radical reappraisal of baseball stats pioneered by Bill James, it's a science that leans heavily on complex mathematical formulas involving stuff like on-base percentage and...

Are your eyes rolling yet?

Fear not, as all this insider gobbledygook is served up for your consideration by screenwriter Aaron Sorkin, who rewrote an earlier script by Steven Zaillian, putting his trademark rapid-fire banter in the service of surprisingly sturdy and traditional underdog sports movie formulas. If you don't think balancing a payroll budget and calculating percentage stats can be the stuff of riveting drama, remember that Sorkin recently won an Oscar for a movie about a lawsuit involving Facebook. This guy can make anything compelling.

In tried-and-true, crowd-pleasing fashion, Moneyball pits Beane and Brand against an entire industry full of naysayers and finger waggers. Baseball is a sport steeped in tradition, which, grand as it may be, also leads to a mind-set that things should be done the way they've always been done, simply because that's the only way they've ever been done. It's not exactly an atmosphere conducive to innovation.

Beane and Brand assemble what the latter describes as "an island of misfit toys," grabbing has-been or never-were players on the cheap and sometimes making them swap positions. There's a delightful subplot in which catcher Scott Hatteberg needs to learn how to play first base. These guys aren't slugging for home runs or hall-of-fame glory, they're just trying to get on base. Beane cannily calls baseball "a war of attrition," and what Moneyball understands better than most baseball pictures is the marathon nature of the season. The games go on, day in and out, but with time on your side and a slow-and-steady philosophy, eventually these numbers are going to start adding up.

Director Bennett Miller mostly stays out of the screenplay's way, a few regrettably artsy flourishes aside, understanding that his best bet is to just leave the camera on Pitt while he speaks fluent Sorkin-ese. When it's at its best, Moneyball is preposterously entertaining, watching Beane and Brand hustling sports agents, owners and rival GMs. It's a movie about the game of baseball that contains surprisingly little actual baseball. It's more like The Bad News Bears with an economics degree. ✖✖✖ of Pygmalion. Sadly, Crazy, Stupid, Love can't sustain that level of manic invention and eventually settles into something more conventional, but pleasant all the same. Luckily, by then we're invested enough in these characters to cheer for the feel-good ending. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Don't Be Afraid of the Dark ★ ½ Famously dashed together in two weeks, writer Nigel McKeand's 1973 ABC Movie of the Week, Don't Be Afraid of the Dark, was the kind of obscure treat that used to be circulated on bootleg VHS tapes by traumatized teens. A passion project for writer/producer Guillermo del Toro, this long-delayed remake winds up straddling the line between a modest premise and reckless CGI abandon. McKeand's teleplay has been thoroughly del Toro-ized. With countless echoes of Pan's Labyrinth, sad-eyed Sally (Bailee Madison) is tormented by creepy-crawly creatures living in the mansion being renovated by her estranged father (Guy Pearce) and would-be stepmom (Katie Holmes). The screenplay leads us to believe that these preoccupied parents consider the mayhem a figment of Sally's imagination, but director Troy Nixey (a comic-book artist making his feature debut) errs by making the attacks too volatile, defying the story's logic. Why would any sane family remain in this obviously haunted house? Less would've been a lot more. (In the suburbs.)

The Guard ★★★ ½ Suffused with a strain of romantic Irish fatalism, writer/director John Michael McDonagh's debut plunders the clichés of a thousand interracial buddy-cop comedies, emerging with an ode to shabby nobility that's stranger and sadder than expected. It's also fookin' hilarious—or at least that's how Sergeant

As If!

Kids in America It's hard to believe that it's been 16 years since the world first met Cher Horowitz and her Beverly Hills cohorts in Clueless. Its contributions to American culture are endless—would you know who Alaïa was if not for a certain Betty's plea? Head back to high school when the Coolidge Corner Theatre screens Amy Heckerling's breezy adaptation of Jane Austen's Emma Sept. 23–24. Maya Phillips

Gerry Boyle might describe it. Played by Brendan Gleeson in one of the great performances of his career. Boyle's a steely-eyed lout, whiling away the hours in a state of perpetual boredom and wasted disappointment, punctuated by occasional visits from Dublin prostitutes. But when a gang of English cocaine traffickers arrive in town, so does a smooth-talking Southern dandy from the FBI (Don Cheadle, master of the reaction shot). Turns out that, like a plus-sized version of every great Humphrey Bogart and Clint Eastwood character, there's a strict moral code lurking somewhere beneath Boyle's anti-social dissolution. The Guard is raw, profane and strangely moving. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy and in the suburbs.)

The Help ★★ This surprise smash is being enjoyed by an audience that has gone sadly underserved by the months-long barrage of superheroes and giant robots that typically define summer entertainment. On one hand, we should rejoice, as this is a female-driven picture with no special effects. But it's a troubling film all the same. Based on Kathryn Stockett's best seller, The Help takes place in Jackson, Miss., circa 1962, when audience surrogate Skeeter Phelan (Emma Stone) returns home to her family's plantation and has an ideological falling-out with her well-to-do childhood friends over their nasty racist behavior. The slightly icky wish-fulfillment fantasy allows white audiences to rally around Skeeter's do-gooder activism while rendering her peers as cartoon monsters. It's a very pleasant lie, sending you out of the cinema on a high note. But what vexes me is why the lie even needed to be told in the first place. Aren't there enough true stories of heroism from the civil rights era? Is it really appropriate for us to all stand and applaud this courageous, fictional white girl? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Drive ★★★★ Played by Ryan Gosling in a silk scorpion jacket and an omnipresent toothpick, the nameless lead is a Hollywood stunt-driver moonlighting as a robbery wheelman. He's an absurd, larger-than-life archetype, and the giddy pleasure of director Nicholas Winding Refn's entertaining Drive is how in love with its very "movie-ness" this movie is. Set in the present day, yet pulsating with a distinctly 1980s glow, it's a boilerplate genre picture where every shot seems designed to make you nod your head in appreciation and mutter the word "awesome." There's a bag of money and some guns, plus one genuinely terrifying turn by (of all people) Albert Brooks as a quick-tempered gangster. It's romantic, in all definitions of the word, positioning performers as icons in front of expansive Los Angeles landscapes, with Gosling emerging as a Tiger Beat Steve McQueen. Ok, so it's a bit self-conscious. But Drive is pulp delirium. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Higher Ground ★★★ The most shocking thing about actress Vera Farmiga's directorial debut is its normalcy. Based on Carolyn S. Briggs' 2002 memoir and set within a tight-knit group of evangelical Christians during the late '70s and early '80s, the movie takes religion as a fact of everyday life. These aren't people we normally see on screen in American films. Church is at the center of their lives, and Farmiga has no interest in passing judgment on them for it. That's Higher Ground's main virtue, and I don't know how it would work at all if she weren't one of the most expressive actresses of our time. So much of the movie is spent watching her watch other people. The picture never settles for easy answers, and these warmly drawn characters are granted a surprising complexity. Farmiga's Corrine is undergoing a crisis of faith, and also one of envy. She longs for the certainty that seems to bring so much comfort and purpose to her fellow parishioners. Like I said, it's different. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Killer Elite ★★ The fact that the most emotionally honest moment in this picture finds Robert De Niro helping himself to a giant bag of money is probably all you need to know about the latest Jason Statham vehicle. As mentor to the bald-headed butt-kicker, De Niro is kidnapped by a nefarious sheik, and the ransom is a list of retired SAS agents that Statham must dispatch. Preposterously claiming to be based on a true story (and having no connection to the Sam Peckinpah film of the same name), this muddled thriller isn't just set in 1980, at times it feels like it was made in the '80s. A bevy of indistinguishable contract killers with mutton-chop sideburns and lousy facial hair take turns trying to explain the labyrinthine plot mechanics, but the film only comes to life whenever Statham is facing off against Clive Owen's surly British operative, who's probably in such a bad mood all the time because his mustache makes him look like a child molester. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Magic Trip: Ken Kesey's Search for a Kool Place ★ Here we go again. Charting Ken Kesey's decline from brilliant novelist to drug-addled dullard, directors Alex Gibney and Alison Ellwood have cobbled together hundreds of hours of unwatchable footage from the Merry Band of Pranksters' 1964 cross-country voyage, already immortalized in Tom Wolfe's The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test. After setting the literary world on fire with One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest and Sometimes a Great Notion, Kesey hooked up with a bunch of similarly minded hippies, painted a school bus with Day-Glo colors and hit the road, pausing in random places to dance in the woods. With legendary Neal Cassady (Jack Kerouac's inspiration for On the Road's Dean Moriarty) at the wheel, this pointless bus trip has become a totem of boomer nostalgia and myth. But finally seeing all this raw, barely-shaped footage, absent the grandeur of Wolfe's prose, it's just a bunch of boring acid-heads who never shut up. Torture. (At Kendall Square.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punchline comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

One Day ★★ Hamstrung by a shallow central gimmick, director Lone Scherfig's follow-up to his overpraised An Education stars Anne Hathaway and Jim Sturgess as star-crossed college pals who spend decades finding annoying excuses not to live happily ever after. Adapting his own best-selling novel, screenwriter David Nicholls employs the grating literary device of checking in on his characters on the same day, every year. The beautiful Hathaway pines for the one who got away in a variety of period-specific outfits and flattering haircuts. Sturgess, a pasty cipher who inexplicably keeps getting cast as a leading man, hardly seems worth her trouble. It's hard to tell what she sees in this womanizing drunk who takes the better part of 20 years to realize that she's madly in love with him. As the picture must jump a year at the end of every scene, Scherfig seems to have expended all her energy on finding the right costumes and pop songs. I guess it works as a fashion show. (In the suburbs.)

30 Minutes or Less ★★ This underachieving riff on 1980s buddy-action comedies stars The Social Network's Jesse Eisenberg as a slacker pizza delivery guy blackmailed into robbing a bank after a couple of drunken ne'er do wells (Danny McBride and Nick Swardson) strap a bomb to his chest. Vaguely distasteful, as the picture was inspired by a true 2003 case in which a middle-aged drug addict exploded in front of news crews, Zombieland director Ruben Fleischer's sophomore effort devotes the bulk of its slender 83-minute running time to undisciplined improvisation. Unfortunately, a little of Danny McBride goes a very long way, and too much of the picture is wasted letting the clock run out. Parks and Recreation's Aziz Ansari seems particularly out of his league, but, bless his heart, Eisenberg gives a bona fide performance here, as if aiming for another Oscar nomination while everybody else just clowns around. (In the suburbs.)

HOMEWARD BOUND

The Head and the Heart establishes direction from dislocation.

The Head and the Heart plays Royale on Sept. 30.

Sean Brackbill

JOSIAH JOHNSON HAD GROWN tired of typical band politics by 2009, when he teamed with fellow singer/songwriter Jonathan Russell to play open-mike nights at Seattle's Conor Byrne Pub.

"Bands are like relationships," says Johnson, a transplant from Southern California. "It's all a balancing act, and if you're in it with the wrong people, it kind of sours you."

Luckily, he and Virginia native Russell found the right people. They may have enlisted some musicians who didn't last, but a few "added a new dimension to the songs," Johnson says.

He called their newfound band the Head and the Heart because his previous career in Web development hadn't been satisfying on either front. "People struggle with that balance," he says.

The Head and the Heart not only satisfies with its buoyant folk-pop, but the group sounds pretty effortless in the process, balancing six musicians who click without crowding each other. "It's more like a free-for-all democratic process than all the other bands I've been in, or that any of us has been in," Johnson says.

Each artist has found a niche in the synergetic collective. Johnson and Russell sing lead on their respective songs, often incorporating singer/violinist Charity Rose Thielen's distinct voice. Keyboardist Kenny Hensley and drummer Tyler Williams help round out the writing process. Chris Zasche handles bass duties.

"The reason why all these people work is that whether or not you always agree with them, you trust their musical instincts," Johnson says from his Seattle home. "If I start out with a song, I don't hold on to what I originally thought the song would be. The other people will be able to improve it because they have a different perspective."

"The energy of the show on our part comes from seeing people connect with words that we wrote."

The results hold true on the Head and the Heart's eponymous debut, first planned as a demo and since re-released by Seattle label Sub Pop, the onetime home of grunge that's now thriving with indie-folk acts like Fleet Foxes.

The Head and the Heart mixes cleanly sculpted piano-based pop and somber chamber-folk, the lyrics reflecting the relocation and dislocation of people finding their place. "My roots have grown but I don't know where they are," the singers harmonize in "Cats and Dogs." "Down in the Valley" imparts the realization that "I am on my way back to where I started." And "Ghosts" suggests a letter home: "Mom and Dad, if you could see me now. Been here for a year and now I own this town, 'cause I've changed."

"We were figuring out with each other when we were writing the songs what our place in this new city was going to be like," says Johnson, 27. "[It was] knowing that you left home for the right reasons, but at the same time, missing the comfort that you had there."

When discussing Seattle's vibrant music scene, he credits its broad community of bloggers, photographers, videographers and radio DJs. "There must be good bands in other cities that just don't see the light of day because they don't have this whole force of people around them," Johnson says. "That's one of the most amazing surprises of living in Seattle—how people in the music scene who aren't even musicians are supportive."

Now the Head and the Heart, which plays Royale on Sept. 30, is generating support on the road. "The energy of the show on our part comes from seeing people connect with words that we wrote," he says. "It's not just our feelings. It's the feelings of the room, which is insane. When that happens, it's kind of magic." ✖✖✖

Side A

Too Cool for Spool Tapes 'N Tapes were among music's first "blog bands," their fame developing initially on the Internet. Despite the name, the postmillenial band pumps out melodies that are anything but obsolete. With tunes ranging from melodic to outright noisy, the group has earned comparisons to Pavement and the Pixies. Their latest endeavor, Outside, is a self-produced throwback, the songs calling out for the scratch and pop of a spinning record over the impersonal ease of an MP3. The band drops by Brighton Music Hall on Sept. 23. Melissa Herrick

Striking Back With Style

Case Clothed In case you hadn't heard, this summer, GQ ranked Boston the worst-dressed city in the U.S. Apparently the mag missed Martine "Martini" Severin's blog, Beyond Boston Chic, where she's been posting her images of fashion-forward Bostonians for the last three years. Come see an exhibit of Severin's photos entitled Look at You, Boston! at Boston City Hall's Mayor's Gallery through October. With her keen eye and hometown pride, Severin's evidence sets the record straight. Now, about all those Sox caps... Alan Tran

Life Is but a Stage

Emotional Recall

Actor John Lithgow drops by Harvard Square's First Parish Church on Sept. 30 to read from his memoir, Drama: An Actor's Education. Having portrayed a transsexual ex-football player, a quirky extraterrestrial and Footloose's God-fearing reverend, Lithgow has explored a myriad of emotional facets. The book details Lithgow's relationships with his actor/director/producer father, the failure of his first marriage and his ascent into the sometimes-glamorous world of theater. Not to mention some scandalous infidelity and Shakespeare—the book has to live up to its title, right?

THE PLAY'S THE THING

Much Ado About Something

Lucky for them, the rarefied group who gathered at The Sports Club L.A. before Opening Night of the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's free Shakespeare on the Common was already tanned and toned enough to brave the exercise floor of the tony gym and assemble on its roofdeck, with its wraparound view of the park.

Hosted by Ritz dwellers Anika Agarwal and Amit Gupta, the cocktail pregame attracted such lovers of culture as someday surgeon Todd Theman and money man Dennis Hong, Argentinean smoothie Gustavo Posse, the stunning Dara Bernard and her husband, Thierry, the eternally effervescent Kelly Shacklett Boullet and her other half, Nicolas, Brookline art collectors Michael and Barbara Greenwald, South End art patrons Trevania and John Henderson, arctic blonde art dealer Anja Kola and her husband, Kier McDonough (aka Kiefer McDougal), music booster and unrecognized royalty Janet Goff, the unsinkable Doris Yaffe, Gallic funboy Eric Jausseran, a guy named Ben who said he was a writer accompanying fashion plate Tonya Chen Mezrich, the shockingly beautiful Bianca de la Garza and her squeeze, Nantucket dreamboat Jess Williams, etc., etc.

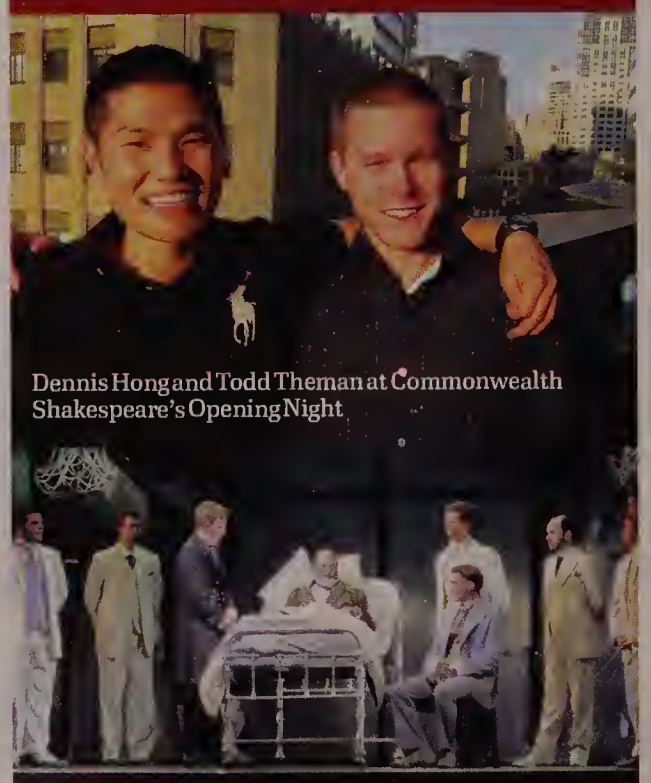
After getting well lubricated, everyone headed over to the Common for the performance, and there was nothing not to love about the production, although some guests found the porta-potties less than appealing.

"Where's your friend?" one attendee asked at intermission.

"She went to the Four Seasons to use the bathroom."



But as the saying goes, "All's well that ends well," which actually happened to be the play. The cast party afterward was a different story. A late-night bacchanal where guests cut loose with the cast, held at the Ladder District hotspot Kingston Station, was undeniably a great time. Unfortunately, though, it ended with a midsummer night's hangover.

Luckily, the Invitations Were Written in Ink

For a charity with a name cuter than "Puppies and Ice Cream," Cradles to Crayons' parties certainly pack a wallop.

All's Well That Ends Well

Cochairs Mike Morris and April Soderstrom at Cradles to Crayons

Pamela Vargas, Paul Karger and Nancy Brady at Cradles to Crayons

The group, which provides disadvantaged kids with the necessities they need to flourish, hosted its Summer Sunset fund-raiser at the Liberty Hotel. The sophisticated soiree attracted organizer and radiant ball of gorgeousness April Soderstrom and her cochair, Mike Morris, blueblooded knockout Jessica Gifford, Hingham's own Timmy Brett, the inevitable Mike Ross, bearded hottie Scott Haavisto, the smokin' Nancy Brady, the flawlessly dressed Gustavo Leon, superhero on the D.L. Ben Rawitz, polite young whippersnapper Rob Finnerty, and talent specialists Jennifer Plant and Laura McMackin, along with one man who claimed to have been out a few nights before and inexplicably found in his pocket the following: a gram of weed, a gram of hash, a pot lollipop, a rhinestone mustache, alcohol swabs and 10 unidentified pills. Hunter S. Thompson would be proud, and it's important to point out that there were no signs of any illicit behavior at the party, although if there were, I was too buzzed to notice. Kidding! (Sort of.)

The award for best go-to-hell pants goes to Tyler Finnegan and his lime-green corduroys embroidered with martini glasses and cocktail shakers.

The evening's most amusing conversation, meanwhile, between a group of chatting friends, included the following exchange:

"You've got a bit of meat on your chin."

"And it's only 7:30!"

Contest of the Month

Contest of the Month: Tyler Finnegan's go-to-hell pants

The first person who can correctly guess whether Tyler Finnegan bought his eye-popping go-to-hell pants in Palm Beach or Nantucket will win an Improper Bostonian T-shirt, which you can embroider with whales, lobsters, pheasants, or whatever the hell else you want. ✖✖✖

The IMPROPER

State of Disgrace

I've given some embarrassing best man speeches in my day, but the most singularly debased took place years ago in southern Ontario. It was in a gloomy town composed of Labatt Blue signs and functional architecture, exactly the sort of place for a terrific bender or a predictable suicide. The reception, however, was a proper, pavilioned affair, full of ladies with delicate makeup and men with serious handshakes. There was never any danger of a spontaneous macarena.

Our chicken dinners came and went, and still the introductory speeches continued. The hours melded into an unholy jam of sentiment, bloodless humor and platitudes about patience. Since the other speakers seemed determined to filibuster my toast, I kept beckoning for wine. Finally, when the emcee at last called me up (introducing me as an honorable man, which was about to seem very funny), I lurched to the podium. Then I told hundreds of people, among them several high-ranking government officials, that the groom was not only as slutty as a bonobo, but was almost certainly gay. I crowned my performance by stealing a case of beer from the kitchen, passing out in a dive bar and losing the marriage license. The incident gave us a lively conversation topic for years.

Of course, a reception needn't be ruined by an outburst of crapulence. In this issue, Alexandra Hall tells us how to survive wedding disasters, while Lindsey Canant finds nuptial inspiration in art exhibits.

Nothing like this weapon of choice seals in the lager's flavor. And with one swipe, it masterfully cuts the top foam. Yes, all froth plays a role, and sometimes that role requires beheading.

MOVING PICTURES

THERE'S A difference between goals and expectations. As one subject put it, married couples can end up "living life by default." Last spring, as they approached their fourth anniversary, locals Tom and Melissa Dowler found themselves "making all these choices based on what married couples should be doing," Melissa says. "We didn't know how to make the right choices for us." And so was born the Long Haul Project, a multimedia collection of blogs, photos and interviews with couples around the country. Working toward a full-length documentary has given the Dowlers a chance to reevaluate their own relationship. "We thought marriage meant we couldn't have adventures, and that's not the case," says Melissa. "We found we can do things we wouldn't have had the courage to do ourselves." NICK ALTSCHULLER

Good Eats

Don't Gnocch It

Here's another excellent reason to venture away from the North End for Italian fare. At L'Impasto, Ricardo Passini's 20-seat cafe in North Cambridge, the Ristorante Fiore alum and his staff move swiftly between pans of handmade pastas and a variety of breads baking in the ovens. While you can order the usuals—Bolognese, ravioli—better to opt for a lesser-known classic: a bittersweet combination of broccoli rabe and juicy littleneck clams with small fists of Sardinian gnocchetti. It's a dish that packs a punch. ELIZABETH BOMZE

IN A PICKLE

And gourmet on the go

EVER SINCE 2008, WHEN Erbaluce and Mike & Patty's opened almost simultaneously in Bay Village, the two eateries have had a symbiotic relationship. Were it represented in a Venn diagram, the overlap would be full of pickles, hot sauce and olives.

SWEET DEAL Sour pickles

When the sandwich shop's pickle supplier moved to the West Coast, Erbaluce chef/owner Charles Draghi began whipping up batches of tasty condiments, from full-sour pickles "with a twist" (rosemary and cardamom) to a hot sauce of fermented habañeros and a blend of fresh peppers, herbs, spices and honey.

Draghi tailors the options for his neighbors, who have limited space and repay the chef's efforts with exceptional sandwiches.

"It's kind of a barter system," Draghi says. "Sometimes I get paid in donuts, too."

ANOTHER CHEF whose carefully calibrated flavors can be enjoyed outside his home base is Pigalle's Marc Orfaly. He's supplying prepared dinners to Bacco's Wine + Cheese in Park Square on Mondays and Wednesdays. Last March, he formed a partnership with Bob Bacco that had him delivering 20 lunches a day. The project has been a hit, especially with "people who live around here in upscale high-rises," Orfaly says. Only a limited number of entrees, like meatloaf stuffed with duck confit, are available, so get there early.

IN BELMONT, the new Gustazo Cuban Café is off to a "really, really crazy" start, according to Patricia Estorino, who owns the restaurant with her husband, Adolfo de la Vega. Dishes flying off the pass include ropa vieja (shredded flank steak), roasted pork and strong Cuban espresso.

ROUND TRIP

When a friend comes back from vacation, the last thing you want to do is sit and shuffle through endless photos of hackneyed tourist scenes. Trade, launching on Atlantic Wharf in mid-October, aims to offer a more welcome kind of snapshot. "Everything on this menu is inspired by the memories of flavors we've tasted on trips around the world," says chef/owner Jody Adams. "There's things that people aren't necessarily familiar with, and it's fun."

Adams has been a mainstay on the restaurant scene for years with Rialto, where the menu changes to showcase different regions of Italy. At Trade, along with partners Sean Griffing and Eric Papachristos, she expands her reach, drawing flavors from locales like India, Greece and Morocco. The concept for the space came about through casual conversation during bike rides. When a location became available on the Greenway, smack in the middle of the historic site of Boston's maritime trade industry, the trio knew they'd found their spot.

With its massive windows and location on the corner of Atlantic Avenue and Congress Street, Trade has a fast-paced air. "This neighborhood is just the center of everything right now," says Papachristos. Griffing agrees, describing it as "the new face of Boston." The modern interior echoes the urban address and is large enough to feel open and fluid, with mirrored paneling above the bar and exposed lightbulbs. It manages to stay cozy thanks to a semi-open kitchen where Adams or executive chef Andrew Hebert (formerly executive sous chef at Rialto) will operate.

SMALL PLATES ALLOW DINERS TO COUNTRY HOP.

Entrees like coconut-spiked seafood stew and whole-roasted fish with lemongrass chutney promise big flavors, but the small plates will allow diners to country-hop through a series of bites. Burrata made daily by local cheese-maker Lourdes Fiore Smith could be a creamy start to a meal of marinated fluke sprinkled with Kaffir lime salt and nuts, or a flatbread topped with lamb merguez and eggplant puree. The joy is in experimentation. "A menu like this requires you to be very focused on fewer ingredients," Adams says. "But a lot of what's here are things I use at home, so I've been playing with them for years."

THINK PINK

Betsey Johnson's designs have made her an international style icon with a career spanning more than four decades. The 69-year-old cancer survivor will host a fashion show and gala at the Boston Center for the Arts Cyclorama benefiting the South End Community Health Center's breast cancer prevention program on Oct. 15.

How has the Betsey Johnson client changed over the last 40 years?

She hasn't changed one bit. She's just like me! Rock 'n' roll or pretty or punk. You know, I don't make anything that you have to have—I don't do basics. It's just a spirit.

What do you have planned for your show here?

It's a really fun mix. I have a funny opening planned, but it's a surprise. It's 10 to 15 looks that are available now at the Boston store, and some spring previews and then a few really over-the-top looks that can be special ordered. And then I have to give a speech. Oh God, I hate giving speeches!

What inspired your latest collection?

Tits and ass. It was just sexy and fun and pretty. And a little rock 'n' roll, but I really just wanted to have a lot of fun with this.

Who would play you in a biopic about your life?

I would like me to play me. Oh God, I have no idea. I guess it depends what time zone they want it to be in. Maybe I could play me, and then if they wanted to do the 16-year-old time zone, they could have an actress play that.

What do you wear in your down time?

Down time for me is leaving work and going to dinner and going to sleep. It's mostly just T-shirts and cutoff jeans. My five essential pieces are basically jeans, T-shirts, this long striped jersey dress that I just live in, my jammies and a fluffy dress. And high heels. I can't work in fashion and not wear high heels. Sneakers are for moving around the city, not working.

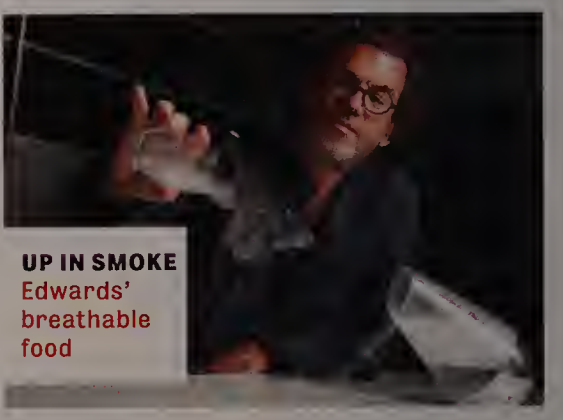
Ring in the Day



The sign of a serious donut shop: By mid-morning, all four trays of seasonal apple cider rings have disappeared, while butternuts, heavily dredged in toasted coconut, and oversized jelly-filled donuts are almost gone. That's par for the course at Ohlin's, a family-run institution that's occupied a corner spot in Belmont's Cushing Square for more than 50 years. Staffers get the oil going before 6 am, when locals swarm, lining up for honey-dipped and chocolate striped with maple. Or maple striped with chocolate, for contrarians. All agree, though, you gotta get here early. ELIZABETH BOMZE

RUNNING ON FUMES

FLYING CARS HAVE YET to reach the market, but we're making inroads on Jetsons-style living. Harvard professor David Edwards is the inventive mind behind Le Whaf, a machine that allows you to breathe your dinner.

Le Whaf works by vibrating liquids at ultrasonic speeds, creating a foggy cloud of flavor particles. The cloud can be transferred from the machine into a glass and then sipped through a straw. With a menu of dishes like tomato soup and tarte tatin, Edwards describes Le Whaf's effects as "high on the experience ladder" (while still light on calories). Drinkers, too, can inhale low-alcohol cocktails.

Le Whaf is slated to be commercially available in the U.S. in the near future, so Edwards' Breathable Foods is developing new flavors—you may soon be able to Whaf a complete tasting menu. Nutrition is "completely accessible with aerosol foods," promises Edwards, but it may take you a few hours to consume the number of calories you normally would at dinnertime. The experience, as Edwards says, is "completely wild." MELISSA HERRICK

Drink of the Moment

Cheating Heart

There's always an appeal to transgression, and anyone looking for the liquid courage to overstep the line should consider Sel de la Terre's ← HESTER PRYNNE'S CUP ($9). Named for the heroine of Nathaniel Hawthorne's Scarlet Letter, this licentious libation is boozy enough to make any imbiber turn bawdy. "Watch out for Hester," jokes resident drink expert Seth Mandeville. "She was a dirty, dirty girl."

Like the famed Pimm's Cup No. 1, the cocktail features Pimm's, a fruity, gin-based liqueur that had its start in 19th-century England. Though the cordial most often appears on summer menus, here it's mixed in a highball with gin and tempestuous ginger beer. The combo is topped off in traditional British style with a cucumber wheel.

Just like its namesake, elements of the drink are complex and contradictory. A whiff of cuke relates little to the flavors waiting inside, though it does telegraph the drink's cool, refreshing finish. Juniper notes plus warming ginger add a bite to the front palate's plummy sweetness. All together, the ingredients make for a sinful and surprising treat. Puritans be warned. LINDSEY CANANT

SUSPENDED DISBELIEF

Boston, from a bird's-eye view

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

IN 1986, MY FAMILY WENT ON vacation to Hawaii. Thumbing through the photo album, it's clear we had adventures, but I remember little beyond the helicopter ride. It had everything a seven-year-old could ask for: classical music pumped into ill-fitting headphones, exciting views blocked by my father's towering frame, a nauseated sister turning green in the adjacent seat. It's not my fondest memory, but the adrenalized atmosphere did make an impression. Now whenever I hear Wagner's "Ride of the Valkryries," obstructed snapshots of majestic waterfalls and volcanoes hover up in my mind.

Brothers Christian and Matthew Nowosiadly have brought that experience to Boston. The two software businessmen happen to be aviation geeks (the back of Matthew's SUV is crammed with RC airplanes), and it's their belief that a helicopter tour is what's needed to propel our city into the stratosphere of the elites, joining such heavenly destinations as Indianapolis, Des Moines and that arbiter of class, Branson, Mo.

Currently, the Nowosiadlys' infrastructure is humbler then their sky-high ambition. Stationed between a tool shop and a dog kennel in Revere, the helipad for Now City Tours, Inc., is a sun-cracked patch of asphalt left over from an abandoned oil rig project. Inside a square of chain-link sits their office, which consists of a folding table under a small collapsible canopy tent (the kind used for bake sales and industrious tailgates). Outside the fence stands a smattering of dry-docked boats, including a shabby Grady-White named "Master Baiter." Matthew jokingly refers to the motif as "rustic New England."

The swampland and gaping gray quarry of Revere look pretty rustic from the air, too, but what you're reminded of when the helicopter begins to levitate is that your perspective on a subject always depends on your angle.

Now City Tours offers three different routes: Skyline, North Shore and South Shore ($99–$124.50). Routes are set but flexible, the paths bending to the whims of the Federal Aviation Administration. I had hoped to get a bird's-eye view of my apartment, but an ocean tanker in Boston Harbor nullified a flyover of the North End. "We can't get over there unless we want some F16s coming after us," said Matthew. Down the barrel of a Gatling cannon was not the angle I was aiming for.

The beauty of the helicopter tour is that it provides you with the real-life views you could previously only imagine. It's akin to dreaming about flying like Superman, at the cost of relinquishing his control, agility and ability to buzz the Zakim Bridge without having to check in with the control tower.

In reality, the copter's glass bubble becomes the world's best window seat. As the Robinson R44 curves around Fenway at 120 mph, you see the park as a skydiver floating in for the first pitch. Snaking along the Charles at 500 feet you're a bird, and the rowers beneath are water-skimming snacks. Every day thousands of pedestrians see their reflection in the Hancock Tower windows, but waving to your image mirrored on the 50th floor is a singular experience.

Like a superhero dream, the ride is cut off too quick. Even with a swing up the South Shore, the trip lasts just over 30 minutes. Is it a tour worth taking? Absolutely. Is it worth $3-$4 per minute? That's trickier to answer.

A city tour implies some educational element, but the descriptions are basic. Native Bostonians aren't going to learn much beyond what the tops of certain landmarks look like. Vacationers are the key (which is why Now City Tours has wisely established a relationship with the Lenox Hotel).

If a friend from out of town has some scratch and an itch to take a tour that doesn't require quacking, Now City Tours would be a viable choice. There are other operations, but the airfields are farther away, and the prices are higher. Maybe your friend will spot you the cost of a seat in exchange for your expertise.

Now City is convenient, just down the road from the Wonderland, and the ability to make Lynn look like an affluent seaside hamlet is a kind of magic. It's a different city seen from the sky. We're much smaller than we sometimes like to admit, but a new altitude can reshape your attitude. ✖✖✖

Why bother wearing anything on your feet at all if you're just going to strut around in dirty water anyway? Guess what? Rain runs through the dirty streets, and that water touches your feet. Duh!

Toeing around the issue

To the MBTA: Like any relationship, we've had our ups and downs, but we've really hit a new low. I took the last train home and found myself locked inside the station. What would've happened if my cell phone were dead? Or if someone with rough intentions had followed me? We're so over.

DOGGED ATTITUDE

Trekking New Hampshire's mountains with man's best friend

TOM RYAN, THE GUY BEHIND The Undertoad, a colorful muckraking newspaper in Newburyport, embarks on an uphill adventure. With his miniature schnauzer, Atticus, he climbs all 48 of New Hampshire's 4,000-foot peaks, twice. In 90 days. In winter. And, unlike his doggy, he's overweight.

With the goal of fund-raising for animal causes and in memory of a cancer-stricken friend, Ryan's quest pushes him and his companion through ice and wind to gorgeous, open summits. Their invisible companions are Thoreau, Emerson and Joseph Campbell, who extol the existential power of solitude, mystery and beauty. Ryan's own descriptions echo theirs, and sometimes he howls for sheer joy. His harmonious connection with Atticus makes the complex, human world below the peaks seem superfluous, while his friendship with Paige, the dog's breeder, comes in a close second to his canine bond.

Following Atticus
by Tom Ryan

Ryan lived in Newburyport.

On the long climbs, Ryan gets the chance to ponder and work out his difficult relationship with his father. Atticus gets cataracts, is cured and becomes, willy-nilly, a celebrity and incidental philanthropist. It's a heartwarming story, and the prose lifts up the reader like a literary balloon. ×××

"I looked for Atticus. He was struggling through snowdrifts deeper than he was tall. Under his frozen mask, he was nearly unrecognizable when he finally reached me. He checked to see if I was okay by pushing his nose against my cheek. I sat up, and he climbed onto my lap and licked my face, believing that he could fix whatever I'd hurt. His body trembled, and I held him tight. It was then I realized that both my jacket and the fleece layers beneath it were freezing into place."

"Choose a lightweight fabric."

TOP NOTCH

Save the oversized "boyfriend" shirts for bedtime and don a feminine button-down instead. An elegant blouse is the perfect layering piece. A bold print looks great on its own, or peaking out from underneath sweaters, jackets and vests.

THE COAST IS CLEAR

Beach getaways rarely get you away from the crowds. This one does.

FRIENDLY SKIES Lounging is de rigueur at Barbados' Fairmont Royal Pavilion.

THE STANDARD ARRIVAL to far too many Caribbean resorts goes something like this: 1) After painful customs lines at the (un-air-conditioned) airport, check in; juggle luggage and a juice-heavy welcome "cocktail." 2) Swat mosquitoes while waiting for room to be ready, fuming at the sight of other guests frolicking on the dunes. 3) Secure chamber, frantically suit up, hit pool, wage battle over a chaise as if it were a raft on the Titanic.

Such are the reasons why travelers have been known to schedule post-vacation sessions with their therapists. And why, once they've learned about enclaves like Fairmont Royal Pavilion in Barbados, they may never have to do it again.

Washed in a glowing hue two notches below Pepto-Bismol, the resort's exterior looks more like a stately home than an imposing resort (its regal name notwithstanding). But the best part lies far behind the facade: Finishing touches have just been put on the last batch of beachfront junior suites—swish-but-understated quarters dressed in muted tones and jacked up with amenities. These open to a studio-sized outdoor living room and deck directly on the beach, which means no more lounge chair skirmishes on the meticulously groomed sand. And no angling to get the pool staff's attention for lunch (there's room service in your suite). Just your own private beach villa to kick back, from morning until—if you want—morning.

Inside, the rooms are striking. It's hard to tire of the view through the balcony glass (crashing waves a few feet away, sherbet-filled skies at sunset), which serves as a silent art film throughout the day. However, should you weary of the spectacle, there are flat screens, local crafts and artwork hung in every direction, WiFi and a media panel to keep you busy.

If you book a junior suite, the room comes with a host of sweet services, not the least of which is an "Airport Fast Track" through Immigration and Customs that allows you to jump the line when you arrive. Plus canapés delivered every evening, gratis. And a dedicated butler for when the Champagne gets low, or when you need a table at the open-air restaurant. Or a ride to the gym to work it off afterwards.

This impressive attitude toward service carries over to the spa, which will send a masseuse or beautician to your doorstep. Not to be missed: the Revitalize Jet Lag Massage—a light body brushing chased by a mix of invigorating and relaxing circulation techniques designed to obliterate the ills of air travel. It's a godsend after a middle seat; book it before leaving Logan, and schedule it for just after check-in. CENTER STAGE

El Centro raises the bar for local Mexican cuisine.

472 Shawmut Ave., Boston
(617-262-5708)

HIGH STEAKS Try the carne asada al carbón with a spicy tarro chelado.

"NO, NO, NO," Allan Rodriguez, chef/owner of El Centro, declares with contempt. "I hate tacos that put fish on the bottom, lettuce, then sauce on the top. Some bites are too dry." His tone then turns reverential, as if he's discussing the construction of a cathedral rather than a seafood wrap. "Every mouthful should be the same. Always put the chipotle sauce first before the fish, then cilantro dressing on top, then carrots and cabbage salad with avocado."

In a city where Brazilian Americans throw pizza, Chinese Americans slice sashimi and French techniques marry with every ethnic cuisine at the fine-dining level, Rodriguez's stance on cultural authenticity is a welcome change. His South End restaurant physically reflects his attitude, with a restored tin ceiling, imported knickknacks and artwork inspired by the golden age of Mexican cinema. Every surface proclaims its homespun roots.

Authenticity is the reason the chilies have so much kick. Along with the dried beef, they come from Rodriguez's parents' ranch in Sonora, in northwest Mexico. Chilies play a big role in El Centro's dishes: Chipotle oil acts as a foundational layer in the tacos ($5-$6 each) and as a garnish when infused with chorizo and drizzled over the superb guacamole estilo El Centro ($9). And chiltepins comprise the lip-searing component of the tarro chelado ($7), a spin on a michelada.

Being true to a cuisine is no virtue if the food isn't delicious, but for the most part, it is. Take the carne asada al carbón ($22), a chargrilled skirt steak laced with chili oil, accompanied by refried beans and rice and set in a wooden bento box of sorts. Avocado and pico de gallo add creamy and crunchy textures to the simply prepared beef, so tender that it unseams with the merest wiggle of a knife. Whereas tortillas would be an afterthought in many places, those served with the steak are stellar. (They're so popular that Rodriguez has been selling them by themselves to takeout customers.) As a result, tacos and quesadillas ($6 each) are particularly worth ordering, especially the al pastor, with its pineapple relish, and, of course,the fish taco.

An intricate layering of spices makes the sopa de tortilla ($8) one of El Centro's best dishes. Various chilies, twice-fried with garlic, bolster a house-made chicken broth and impart density and dimension to the rich soup. Another winner, the chicken mole ($18), uses dried Colorado chili to keep the sauce from tasting too chocolatey sweet.

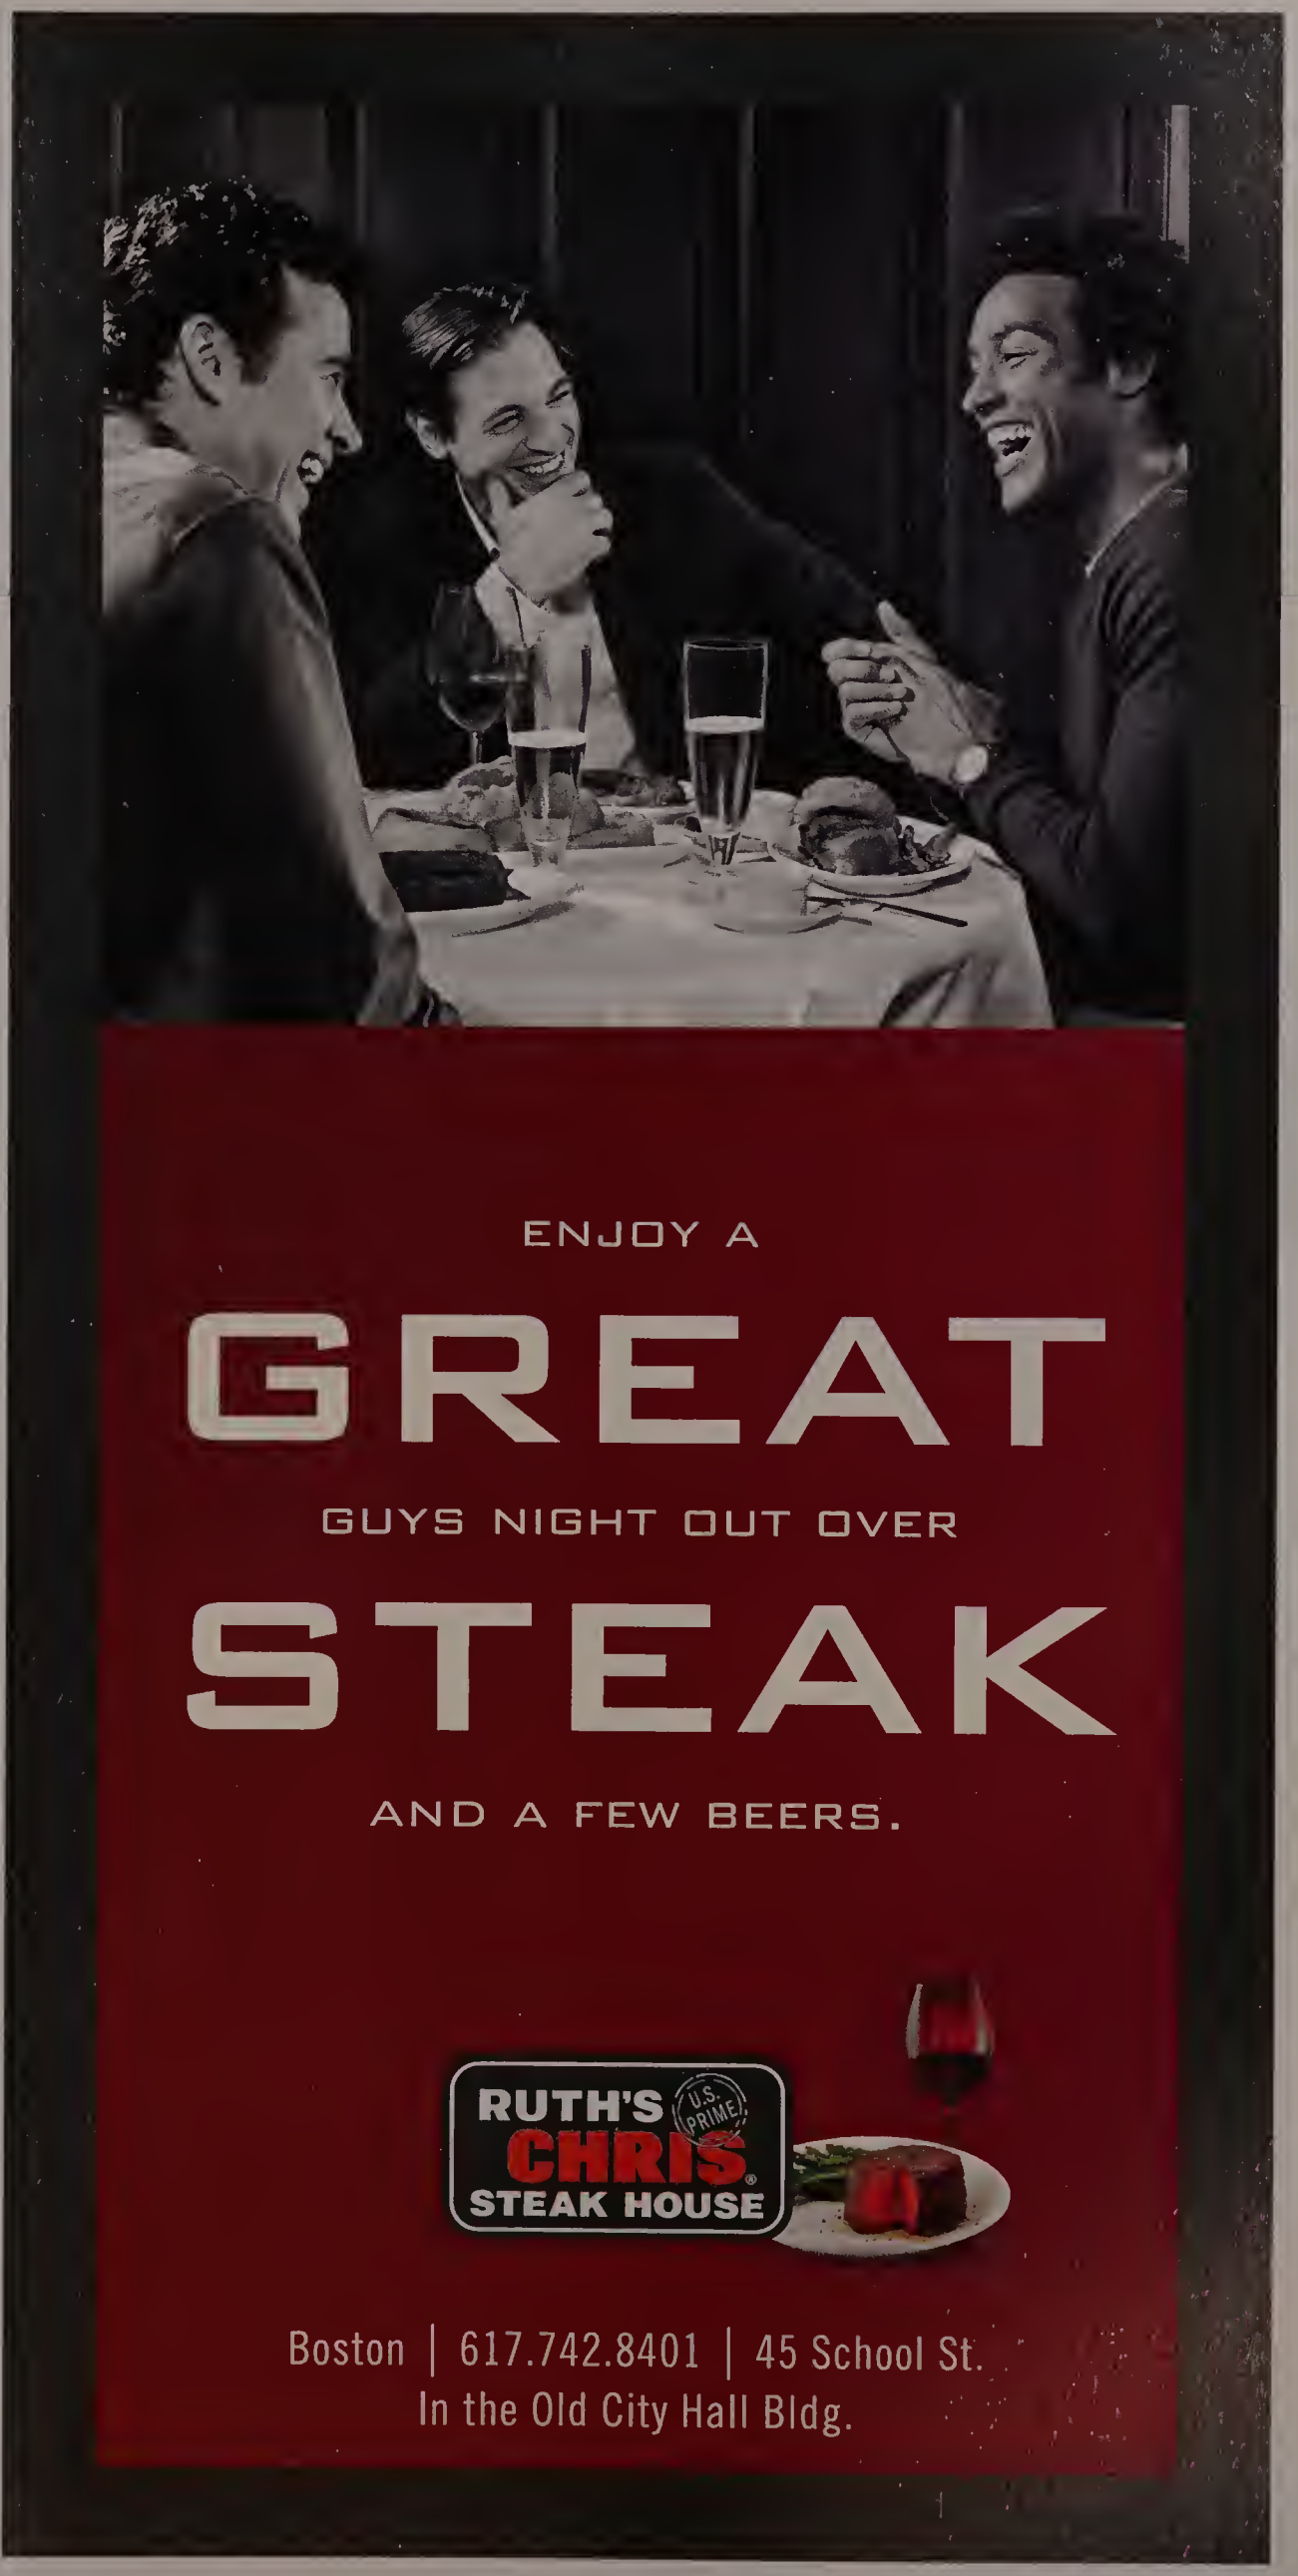
Emily Knudsen

COUNTING COLORES El Centro's vibrant space

Not all dishes are so successful. It's hard to gnaw on the grilled corn ($7) and avoid comparing it unfavorably to the house specialty at Toro, just a few blocks away. Whereas Toro's comes slathered with an aioli and queso fresco to add fatty flavor to juicy kernels, El Centro's ears arrive smothered in ricotta and romano but blackened and desiccated, as if they've been lurking unattended on a back burner. Another downer is the camarones papantla à la Boston ($22), billed as prawns stuffed with cheese and wrapped in bacon, but in actuality dry and cheeseless.

B.N.'s Picks

Guacamole estilo El Centro



Taco al pastor

Sopa de tortilla

Immersed in the jovial noise of young families and South End date-nighters, however, it's easy to forgive the few lapses in cuisine or, on occasion, service—especially since the staff is so eager to please. Mains might arrive before appetizers are finished, threatening chaos on the small tables; servers might take your order after they've attended to a group that's just been seated; your second margarita ($10) might arrive after the buzz from the first has waned. The likelihood of missteps rises as the small, 45-seat restaurant gets more crowded throughout the night, but apologies and smiles are readily available to stem concerns.

Indeed, the atmosphere practically vibrates with goodwill. One of my visits coincided with Mexican Independence Day, and although most of the diners, including myself, were unaware of the date, the restaurant passed out complimentary Mexican pastries and history lessons in celebration. El Centro clearly takes pride in its food and origins, but it's the underlying idea of food as a universal connection that makes dining there so enjoyable. ✖✖✖

Wagering on the Massachusetts casino debate

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

AS I WRITE THIS, THE Massachusetts casino debate is still unresolved. On one side, gambling proponents claim that the casino moratorium only sends tax dollars across state lines. On the other, opponents contend that casinos are a social ill that cause more problems than they solve. And then there are people like me, who are absolutely committed to the position that I don't really care either way. Should Massachusetts build casinos? The answer is maybe. Follow along, then, if you want to learn a little bit about casinos and a lot about why I'm not an editorial writer.

In general, I think you should let people access their vices as conveniently as possible. I lost a little faith in humanity when the people of the commonwealth voted to uphold the ban on selling beer and wine in grocery stores. If you don't want to buy beer in a market, don't. But why do you care if I do? If you recall, there was a scare ad featuring The Simpsons' Police Chief Wiggum warning that the sale of fermented beverages alongside food would somehow shred the moral fabric of society and turn our youths onto the scandalous practice of pairing wines with cheese. You know, like they do in New Hampshire.

But casinos are a unique sort of vice. They're better when they're bigger, because a casino demands infrequency and wonderment. It's sort of like how Six Flags is fun, but you don't want to ride Cannonball Falls every day on your way to work. Unless, that is, you work as a lifeguard at the splash-down pool, and you live in a house at the top of the waterslide, in which case that would just be the most efficient commute. But my point is that you don't want to play pai gow poker every day. And if you do, you've got to take a hard look in the mirror and say, "I'm an 80-year-old Asian man with a gambling problem."

Therefore, if we do build casinos, they should be massive. You need a certain scale, a certain grandiosity, to attract top acts like Belinda Carlisle and Toto. Because a modern casino isn't just about the gambling. It's about the total package—everything from entertainment and shopping to dining in dark, windowless steakhouses. If we build casinos, I demand a celebrity-branded steakhouse that's so dark inside that I'll need night-vision goggles to cut my porterhouse.

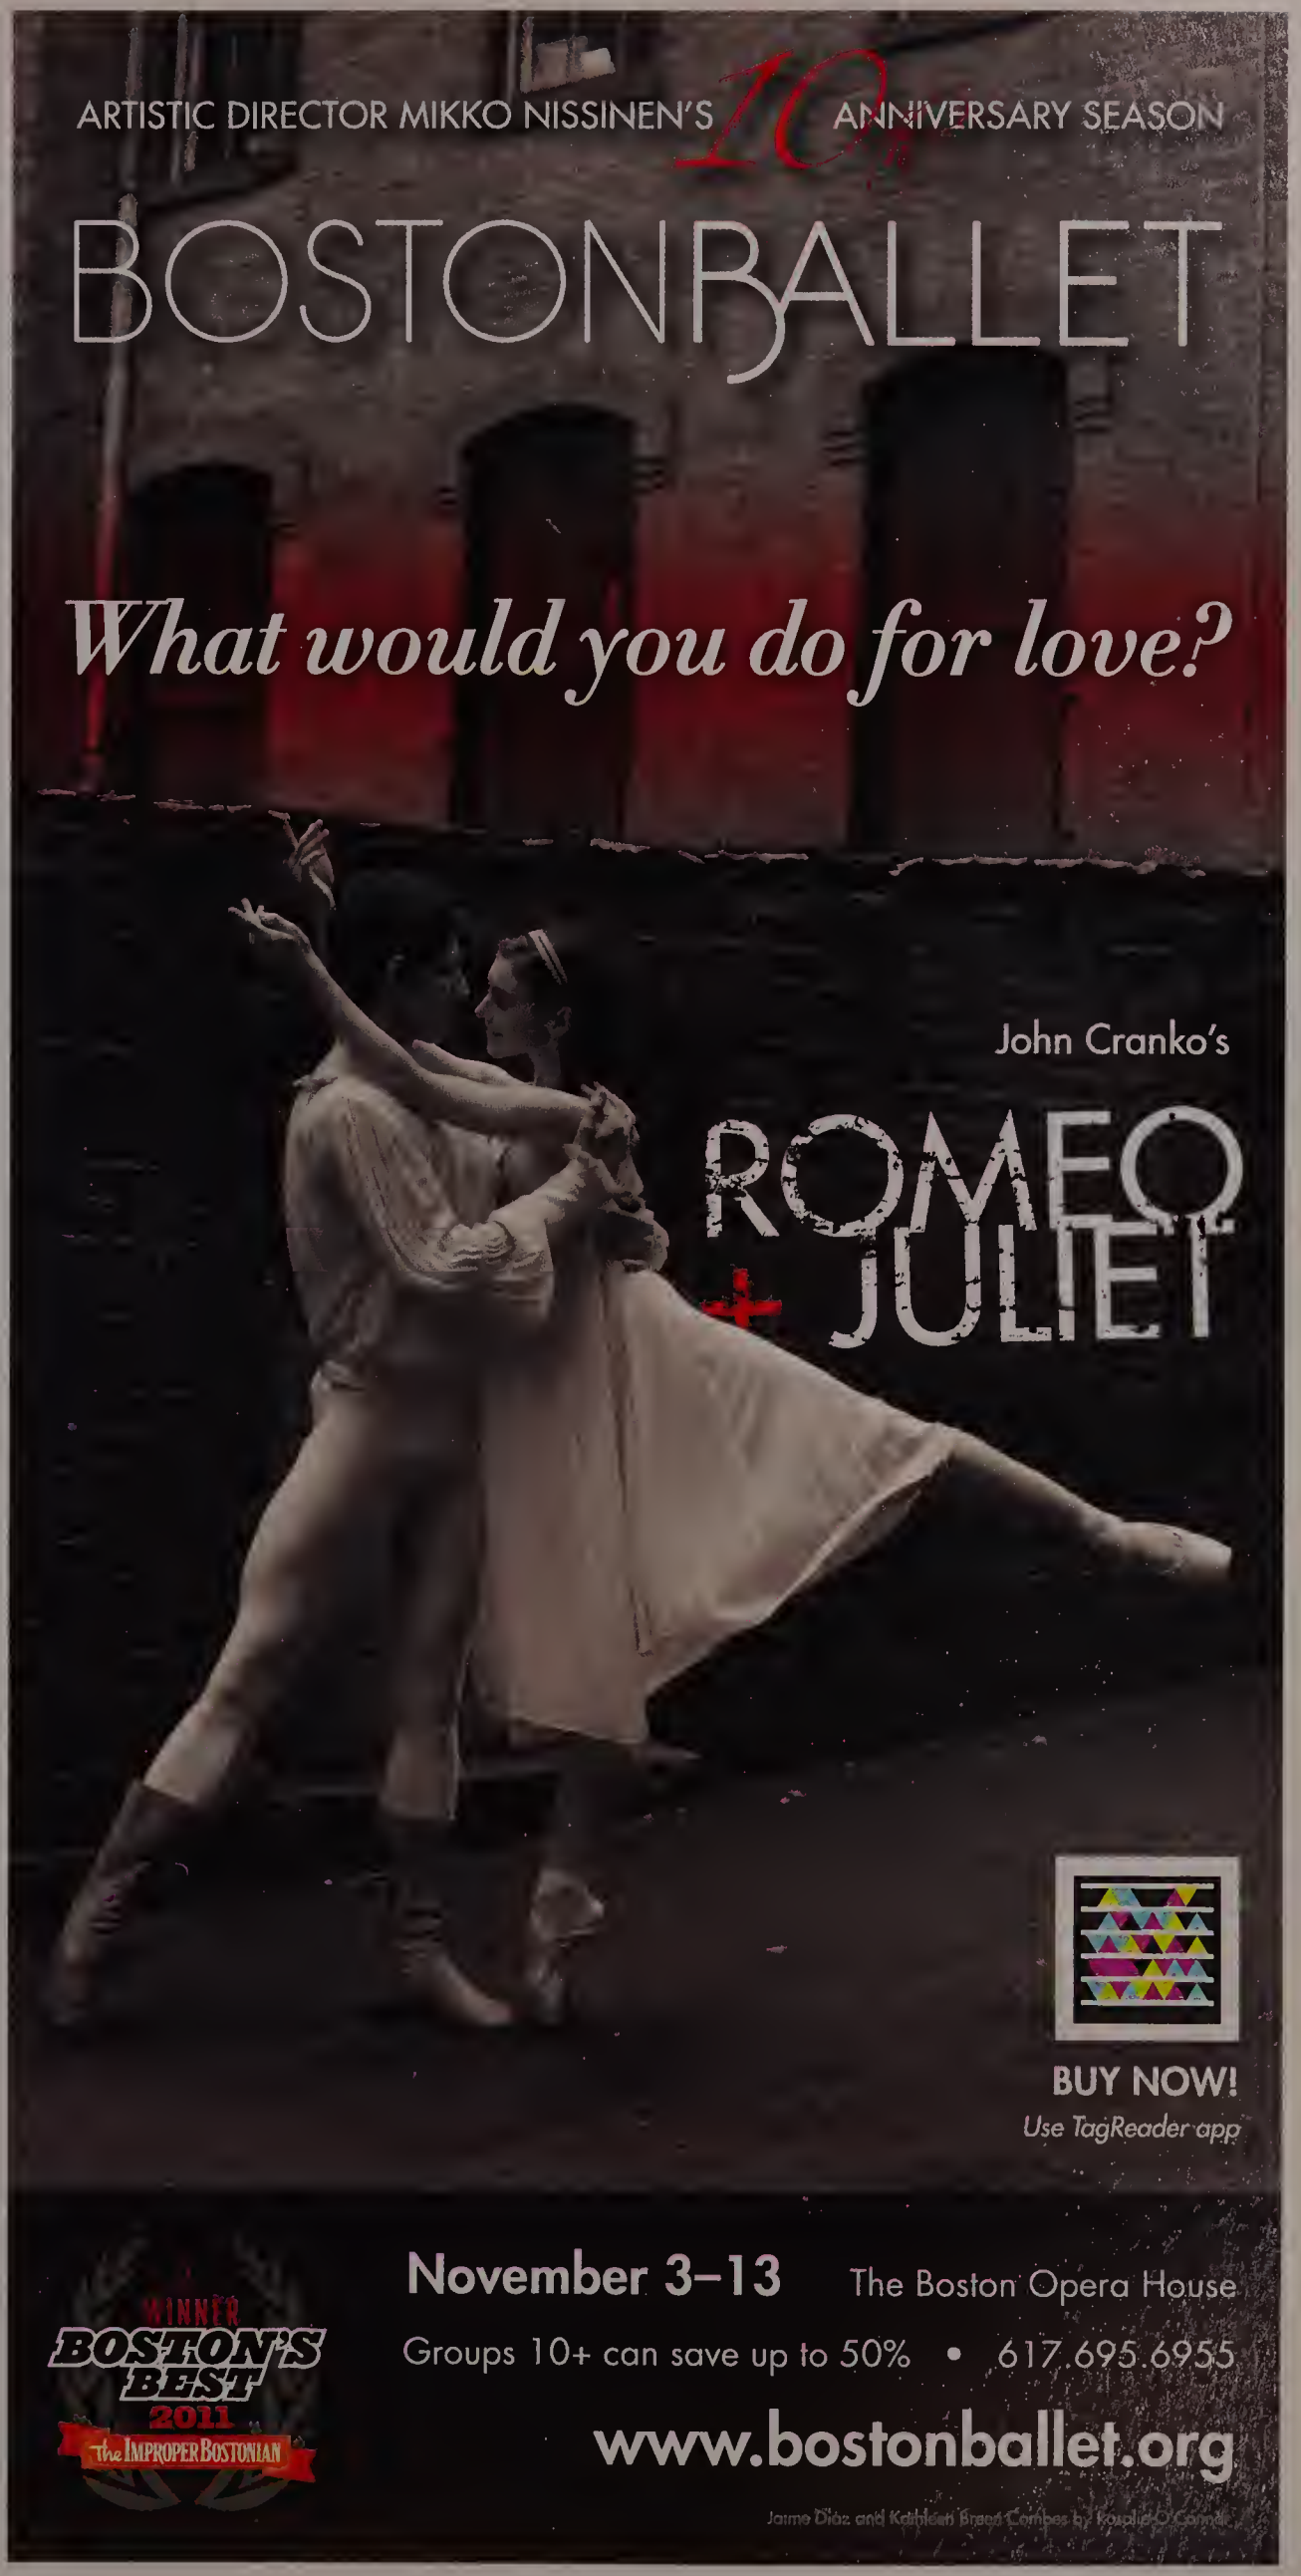
And whoa, is that an alpaca hanging out next to the blackjack dealer? Yes, it is. Because those things are cute, and they should be randomly distributed throughout the casino. Again: sense of occasion.



Anecdotally, it does seem like there's enough demand to support some new gambling establishments. Every time I've tried to reserve a room at Foxwoods or Mohegan Sun for a weekend, it's been booked solid. So I end up staying at off-site places that are, shall we say, hit or miss. I once rented a room at a hotel near Mohegan Sun that promised limo service to the casino. And, technically, it was a limo, just one from 1989. When I rolled up to the entrance in a stretch Town Car with a boomerang TV antenna on the trunk, I was surprised that I wasn't immediately comped Champagne and scallops wrapped in bacon. I mean, I arrived in a limousine, just like Donald Trump or a girl going to prom. Obviously I'm the kind of whale who's going to spend as much as $100 without even thinking twice about it.

Casino foes have raised the issue that certain people might prove a little too enthusiastic, and gambling addiction is a valid concern. At my bachelor party in Vegas, two friends sat at a blackjack table for so long that the casino handed them pamphlets entitled When the Fun Stops. But we already have scratch tickets and Keno and the stock market. One more outlet for wagering isn't going to plunge us too much deeper into the depths of depravity. It's not like we're talking about legalizing the all-female septuagenarian prizefights that go down every Friday at midnight on the docks by the aquarium. Those are illegal and should remain so.

Essentially, the casino debate isn't as momentous as it might seem. If we build a few casinos, it'll be more convenient to get your (hopefully occasional) gambling fix. If we don't, you can still drive to Connecticut or, God help you, Atlantic City. Maybe the answer is to compromise and have the casino complexes straddle the state line, so the gambling happens in Rhode Island, or, as I call it, Massachusetts' Mexico. And maybe Belinda Carlisle could become the Celine Dion of Pawtucket. But I wouldn't bet on it. ✖✖✖

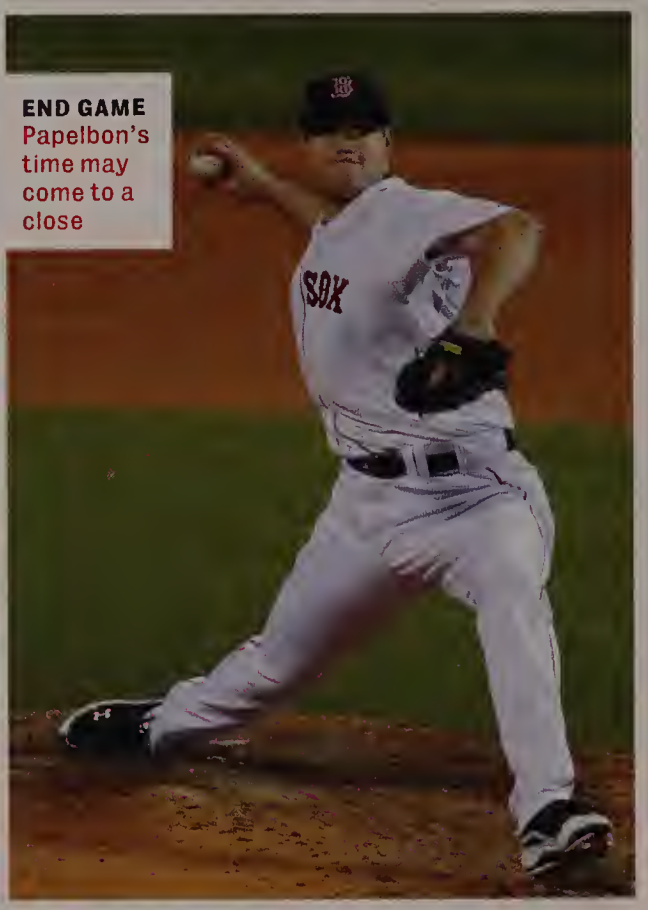
WHERE A NINE-GAME LEAD IS NEVER ENOUGH

2 PATRIOT DISAPPOINTMENTS

Price Is Wrong I wasn't alone in expecting big things from Taylor Price, so I know I'm not alone in asking: "What the hell happened?" Price seems to have fallen into Belichick's young receiver abyss, and I'm wondering when we'll see him again. His early season no-show may be the only thing keeping Ochocinco employed.

Not My McCourty I'll admit that the expectations may have been a little unhealthy. For instance, coming into this season, I'd already dubbed Devin McCourty the next Ty Law. I may have mentioned him in the same sentence as Champ Bailey. After three games, I'd settle for Hank Poteat. It's only a matter of time before DM settles down, but the Pats don't have much time to wait.

3 on the Bruins Beginnings



All Aboard By the end of last season, the Bruins bandwagon was more crowded than a Japanese subway car. But how many of those new fans survived the summer? For the diehards' sake, I hope none. But with the Celtics on vacation, and the Sox now on their way, you might want to brace yourself for a Pink Skate invasion. "Sweet Charaliiiine, ba ba ba!"

Old Man Vezina At 37 years old, Tim Thomas still has it. But at 37, he's also 37 years old. So one of Claude Julien's main concerns this season will be to keep Thomas fresh. That probably means more Tuukka Time, but that's fine. Whatever it takes to have that bearded brick wall healthy for the playoffs. Yes, I'm already talking about the playoffs. (And yes, bearded brick wall.)

Tyler, the Creator In Game 2 of last year's Conference Finals, Tyler Seguin gave us a glimpse of how sweet life will be once he hits his prime. So how long before he gets there? And how much more do we expect in Year 2? I don't want to set the bar too high, so what do you say: 80-90 goals?

5 ON THE SOX COLLAPSE

END GAME Papelbon's time may come to a close

Ellsbury for MVP? No disrespect to Jacoby Ellsbury, but he doesn't deserve the award. I know, he had one of the most exciting seasons we've ever seen in Boston. He became the first member of the Red Sox 30/30 Club (Carl Crawford might get there if you combine his stats over the course of his contract). Ellsbury kept the Sox afloat, and we were lucky to watch him play. But no one who had anything to do with the 2011 Sox deserves the MVP.

Let Him Go They can't bring back John Lackey, can they? Is there any way he'll be able to work out... whatever he needs to work out... while living under Boston's microscope? No way. It's all gone too far. He hates it here, here hates him, and the only way it'll ever get better is if Lackey is sent packing. (Even then, I'm sure he'll complain about the suitcase.)

Tito and Theo At this point, I can't see them both coming back. Whether it's Theo to the Cubs, or Francona to unemployment (or the White Sox?), it feels like at least one them is about to split. So here's my question: Who would the Sox miss more? (Write your answer on the back of this magazine and put it back in the box. I'll collect and tally the votes for next issue.)

Papi and Paps Of all the Sox free agents, David Ortiz and Jonathan Papelbon are the most significant. First, we all figured Paps would be back, but now, who knows? And Papi? With his sad September performance, the big numbers don't mean quite as much. If he's not ready to bring down his price, we could be looking at the end of an era. (Or, as Jerry Remy calls it, "eraRR.")

Domo Arigato, Mr. Roboto I don't want to suggest that anything good came out of the Sox September choke job, but I'm going to anyway: JD Drew is done! After four years (and a depressing amount of cash), his reign of lethargic terror is over. To celebrate, I've renamed the Red Sox disabled list "The JD Drew Memorial DL." I hope you'll all spread the word.

1 ONE LAST SOX THOUGHT

What happened with the Sox was disgraceful, an embarrassment. Or, as John Lackey would describe it, "someone else's fault." But for those trying to compare this present-day mess to how things were before 2004, just stop. This collapse can't hold a candle to the pre–World Series despair (even if it still really burns).

4 DATES TO WATCH

10/6: Hockey's back, as the Bruins host the Flyers. Before that, Banner No. 6 is raised to the rafters. Before that, you get drunk (or, to quote a wise man, "lubed up.")

10/8: Oh yeah, it's Game 1 of the ALCS, baby... no wait. Crap.

10/9: Don't mind the shrieking. (That's just Faith Hill.) The Jets are in town for Sunday Night Football.

10/13: Paul Pierce turns 34, Doc Rivers turns 50, and they'll both have plenty of time to celebrate.

Soroff On AMSALE ABERRA

The designer dishes on Ethiopian styles, Kate Middleton and showing too much skin.

WEDDING DRESS DESIGNER AMSALE ABERRA was born and raised in Ethiopia. She came to the United States to study commercial art at UMass Boston before working as a design assistant for Harvé Bernard. Two years later, she launched her custom bridal-gown business after searching for something for her own nuptials. She started her business out of her loft, and her designs quickly became synonymous with a "forever modern," subtle approach. Her evening wear has been worn by celebrities, including Halle Berry, Julia Roberts, Salma Hayek and Heidi Klum, while the first season of her reality TV show, Amsale Girls, aired on WE tv this year. Her designs are available at her Madison Avenue salon, Bergdorf Goodman, Saks Fifth Avenue and Neiman Marcus. Aberra lives in New York City with her husband.

Jonathan Soroff: Isn't your slogan "forever modern" an oxymoron?
Amsale Aberra: No, it's not contradictory. Think of Audrey Hepburn. That will give you an idea of what it means. If you look at her, the clothing she wore then you can wear today.

So it's classic?
When I design a dress, I try to think of the bride looking at pictures of herself 20 years from now. I want her to feel good about it rather than realizing that it was trendy and saying, "What was I thinking?"

What was your opinion of Kate Middleton?
I was watching in my studio, and we all thought it would be something very bold or unusual, unique, over-the-top. And then when I saw her, she was just a really beautiful bride. Classic and understated.

What does a traditional Ethiopian bride wear?
In the city, people wear Western styles. My mother wore a white wedding dress, and everyone in my generation does, too. In the countryside, you wear a traditional white, handwoven cotton dress with embroidery, and certainly different tribes have different accessories or whatever. But to be honest, I really can't say because every tribe has its own traditions.

Did your upbringing inform your aesthetic?
I'm not so sure, because, in general, Ethiopian women love to dress up, and it's even a little more elaborate than the way I design. I think my designs are simpler. If I think about it, the way my Ethiopian heritage affects my design is simply that weddings there are a big deal.

Biggest mistake most brides make?
Listening to too many people, especially people who don't know them that well. They end up doing something that's not comfortable to them. They end up getting confused.

Most egregious wedding gown detail?
I like brides to be clearly feminine, their skin showing. When they cross the line into inappropriate immodesty, it's a problem. When they look like they're going to a club instead of a church. A wedding involves your family, your grandmother, your coworkers, so being appropriately dressed and not too revealing is key.

How do you flatter a woman's figure?
An example would be someone who's a size 18, and she may be perfectly proportioned, so she can wear a fitted dress. You need to take into account the specific bride's features. Most brides know their bodies. They know what silhouette flatters them.

Is there a celebrity whom you were especially proud to dress?
Celebrities are just like any bride. Stars become brides, whereas, in general, the bride becomes a star. It's kind of a role reversal. They're excited. They want your opinion. They blush when you put a veil on them. But one we just recently dressed for her wedding was America Ferrera. She was so beautiful, both inside and out. Absolutely lovely.

What do all good weddings have in common?
Immediately, what speaks to me is when you see that the bride and groom aren't stressed out. They're dancing. They're celebrating. It takes me back to my own wedding day and how happy I was. If it's stuffy and it's staged, that may be a beautiful wedding stylistically, but the emotion isn't there.

Favorite flower?
I love all of them. It just depends on how you use them.

Biggest extravagance in most weddings?
It depends on your priorities. If flowers are the most important thing to you, and you don't care as much about the band, you can make a botanical garden.

Are you conscious that you're designing something that will probably never be worn again?
No. I concentrate on the day. Despite the fact that they may only wear it for six hours, it's the most important garment they'll ever wear because of the pictures. So I don't think of it as a one-day thing. In your memory, you relive it.

Ever have someone wear their dress again?
There's one client who goes back to the restaurant where she was married every year for her anniversary, and she wears her dress.

Ever get sick of Mendelssohn's wedding march?
I don't get sick of any tradition. Even the chicken dance has some sentiment for me.

Does your pared-down aesthetic carry over to your taste in, say, home decor?
Yes, absolutely. The Amsale Collection reflects my home and how I live in general. This is the principle for me: clean and understated. Not in a spare way. My home is a little eclectic. I have an Ethiopian chair and African masks mixed with a modern sofa.

What's your favorite wedding tradition?
The father walking the bride down the aisle. That's the most emotional moment.

How do you deal with same-sex weddings?
I'd treat them as individuals and figure out what they want to wear. I'm not going to try and make one more masculine, unless they choose that. With same-sex marriages, there's a little more freedom to do something new because the whole concept is new, and I really like that. ✖✖✖

Wedding CRASHES

BY ALEXANDRA HALL

It's every engaged couple's worst nightmare: Something bad—publicly humiliating, personally destructive, downright annoying, or all of the above—happens just before (or during) the wedding. You never expect fortune to squirt ketchup on your Vera Wang, but unexpected things do happen to scores of hyper-organized, well-connected, conscientious couples on their big day.

Should we pity these poor lovebirds? Most certainly. Should we laugh at them? Obviously. Should we whisper behind their backs that there ought to be a bridal version of schadenfreude, some German word for "I am hugely relieved my wedding wasn't like yours?" Perhaps not.

But do we want to hear about their near-death-to-romance experiences and, more importantly, learn about how they fixed their problems before it was too late?

We do.

DO OR DYE

On the elegant grounds of Cape Cod's Chatham Bars Inn, Debbie Welch, owner/stylist at Studio 9 in Boston, brandished her curling iron, ready to beautify the bride three hours before her ceremony. But her client's normally soft-brown locks had mysteriously turned fuchsia.

"On anyone's wedding day, you don't want to tell them that something's gone that horribly wrong," says Welch. "We'd had a trial hair run earlier; we knew what style we were going to do," she says. "But when I went to style it, I found hot pink blotches of color scattered throughout her head. I really didn't want to bring it to her attention." It didn't matter. The bride caught a glimpse of herself in the mirror and freaked. Turns out, before stepping out in the pouring rain, she had thrown on a hot pink hoodie. Its dye ran directly onto her hair, and the result was Gwen Stefani chic.

"There wasn't any time before the ceremony to redo color," Welch says. "So I twisted and manipulated her hair to camouflage the pink. It was a split-second thing. I made sure almost nothing showed through. In the end, no one noticed."

Less dramatic, but no less traumatizing, is the last-minute battle between brides and their updos. "I've had brides faint in my chair because they were so nervous, and they saw an updo they weren't expecting," says Leon de Magistris of Leon and Co. "We try to calm them down. We switch directions back toward something closer to what they usually wear, so they're back in their comfort zone and happy again."

LOVE IS BLIND DRUNK

Channeling the Wolf from Pulp Fiction is apparently one of the skills taught in wedding-planner school. "I've had to hire a police detail to keep families apart," says Michele Bernier, who's been a planner for 26 years and currently handles weddings at Bedford Village Inn. "I've had a bride get drunk and punch her mother in the face, and the groom had to pull her off," she says.

Two years ago, a bride from prominent family origins (whom Bernier refused to name) was an hour late for her ceremony. "Her groom came up wondering where she was," she remembers. Bernier ran up to the bride's suite into a scene straight out of The Great Gatsby. "The bride was sitting on the ground in her bustier, so drunk she couldn't stand. We finally get her to the aisle, and she couldn't walk by herself, but we guided her as best we could. And then she just kept walking down past the end of the aisle, straight past the groom and then into the floral centerpiece."

She crashed into the arrangement, which toppled and doused water all over the first two rows of guests. "She's crouched over, unable to remember her vows, waving to everybody, yelling, 'Thank you, thank you,' to everyone." Between whispering vows in the bride's ear and propping her up, Bernier and her staff got the ceremony done. "She called the next day to say she didn't remember one single thing from her wedding," Bernier says. "It's amazing it even came off. But a great staff can do that. We were just the glue that kept the wedding going."

FORGET-ME-NOTS

For 14 years, Andrew Anderson, co-owner of Ilex Designs, has been creating wedding arrangements. The most common snag he sees? "A couple will forget about flowers for just one of the family members," he says. "And that can be politically dicey." At one service about a year ago at the Ritz-Carlton, Boston Common, he remembers, "The mother of the bride rushed up to me to tell me they'd forgotten to order one aunt's corsage. She was panicked—she knew this was not going to go well."

He turned on a dime. "Oh, I think that it's in the other room," he answered, and proceeded to secretly pick flowers out of one of the centerpieces, grab some floral tape, and create a makeshift corsage. "There it was all along," he answered to the none-the-wiser aunt. "The mom looked at me and wiped her brow. That was one complaint she now wouldn't have to hear from her sister for the next 25 Thanksgivings."

SEW THERE

It was 90 minutes and counting to the ceremony, and one bride (who withheld her name out of embarrassment) was feeling relatively unfazed by the idea of her impending union. "I stepped into my gown, and my maid of honor went to zip it up," she recalls. "The entire zipper came off. It just completely ripped."

The bride and her bridesmaids stared at one another. No one had a clue what to do. "My mom was motivated," she says. "She must've called 10 people about who could help." The last person she rang was Chestnut Hill's Mario the Tailor, who sent someone to sew her back into her dress—literally. "I stood there while she sewed the dress around me," she recalls. "I had to walk extremely carefully down the aisle. And after, she had to carefully rip the dress off of me. It was horrible, because she'd worked so hard to make the dress look beautiful even temporarily. I wish I'd gone to her in the first place."

GETTING HITCHED

One frigid, snowy afternoon last January, the Four Seasons Hotel Boston's assistant director of catering Philip Deschamps received an urgent phone call. It was a dispatch company, informing him that a bride had been stranded by the side of the road while en route to her ceremony. "We had arranged for an antique Rolls-Royce with heat—which isn't easy to find," he says. "It was to collect the bride and her dad at their family home in Concord. At 4 pm, they broke down four blocks from the family's home… and the church service was at 5 pm." Deschamps, unable to contact the hotel concierge, immediately located a limousine to rush and collect the stranded pair. Despite the snow, the car picked them up by 4:45 pm, and the bride arrived at the church unscathed. Performing a service he never expected, Deschamps saved the day and expanded the definition of "catering."

PUT A CORK IN IT

Sarah and Ian Oldenburg are proud oenophiles. They make regular trips to California vineyards and have an evolving list of favorite vintages. As they were planning their Cape Cod wedding last spring, they took said list to a wine vendor near the reception site. Then, a week before the big day came an unwelcome call. "The vendor basically came back at the last minute and told us he couldn't get anything we'd asked for because nothing we requested was distributed in Massachusetts, which we knew wasn't true, since we'd bought them here before," Sarah says.

Their next call was to T.J. Douglas, co-owner of the Urban Grape. "He had everything we'd ever bought recorded, so he knew exactly what we were looking for." He had a proposal for them the next morning based on their picks, plus a few additional recommendations to match their menu—one of which they added. "It's since become one of my favorite wines," Sarah enthuses.

WHEN TOILETS ATTACK

Jewelry designer Gary Shteyman had spent weeks handcrafting one couple's rings—work he never expected to repeat. But on the morning of the wedding, the groom called him, frantic. "He'd dropped his ring into the toilet as he was getting ready in the bathroom, and didn't know it" says Margarita Druker, who co-owns Persona Jewelry+ with Shteyman. "And then he flushed it."

The groom was mortified about telling the bride; she was unusually superstitious, and he was afraid she'd take the accident as a sign they shouldn't get married. So he rang Shteyman and said he'd pay whatever it cost for an exact replacement. "We had four hours to make him the same ring and deliver it to the ceremony site," Druker says. "We had to literally drop everything else and make it. I still can't believe we pulled it off," she adds. "But to this day, I still don't think the bride has any idea what happened, which definitely gave them a better shot at happily ever after." ✖✖✖

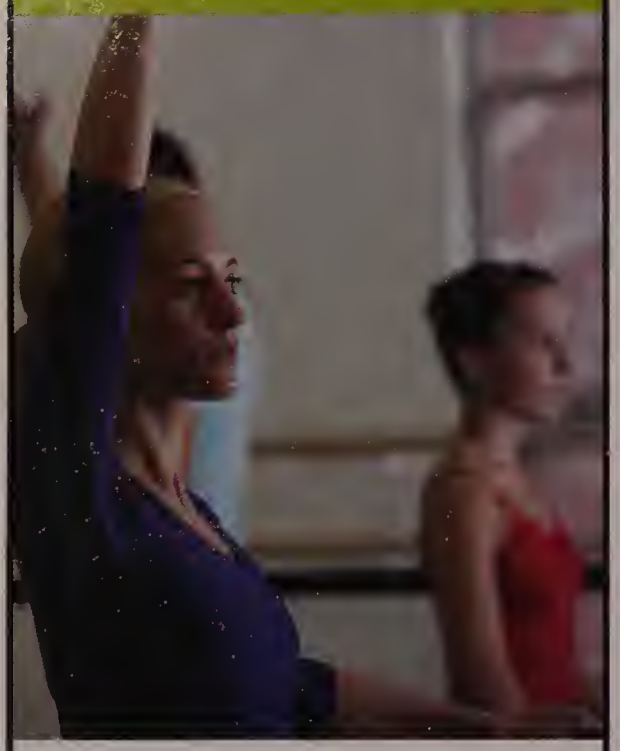
King Me



BACK IN ACTION

A BADASS LIKE LORENZO Lamas probably isn't the first person you'd think of casting in a flashy musical, and he's OK with that. "I think people are surprised to see me onstage because I'm basically just this action-hero doofus," he says. "But I'm someone who got his start in theater and is just a regular guy." The soap actor–turned-Renegade-legend stars in North Shore Music Theater's production of The King and I through Oct. 9, taking over Yul Brynner's famous title role for the second time. "The heart of the show is what keeps people coming back, but the music is what sustains." says Lamas. But don't think this is the last we'll see of Lamas as a tough guy—when the curtain falls, he'll begin work on The Z Team, a reality series for Reelz documenting his newfound career as a bounty hunter, with a little help from other (hopefully equally self-aware) action heroes. KYLE WRIGHT

The King and I runs through Oct. 9, $35–$86, at North Shore Music Theater, 62 Dunham Road, Beverly (978-232-7200) nsmt.org.

Think Finn

Going With the Flow Huckleberry Finn may be one of the greatest stories ever written, but the tale is so ingrained in American culture that a stage adaptation could have major snooze potential. Fortunately, the Lyric Stage Company of Boston's Big River incorporates a bluegrass score by the late Roger Miller, transporting the audience to the antebellum South with Huck and Jim as they embark on a quest for freedom. And like the mighty Mississippi, all journeys must end—Big River closes on Oct. 8. Alan Tran

Contagion ★★ ½ Working once again in grand canvas Traffic mode, director Steven Soderbergh's chilling pandemic procedural follows a killer strain of the flu from Gwyneth Paltrow's hacking cough to the far corners of the globe, leaving 12 million people and dozens of Academy Award winners dead in its wake. Soderbergh is a model craftsman fascinated by process, but sometimes he can be a bit too clinical and bloodless for his own good. Ironically, what makes Contagion so effective also turns out to be its undoing, as the movie's stubborn refusal to provide conventional Hollywood payoffs makes it easy to respect and difficult to love. Matt Damon provides the few moments of emotional ballast as a suddenly single dad functioning as our audience surrogate. The first 40 minutes are exceptional, but as the disease spreads, the screenplay stretches itself too thin over too many characters and storylines. It's an expertly mounted, emotionally remote film. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Crazy, Stupid, Love ★★★ Unlike other freaky-deaky method actors like Sean Penn and Nicolas Cage, Ryan Gosling happens to look like a movie star, and this too-carefully structured romantic comedy benefits immeasurably from his brand of anarchy. Backing up a bit, the film stars Steve Carell (who also produced) as a middle-aged husband unceremoniously dropped by his childhood sweetheart (Julianne Moore) after she's had an ill-advised dalliance with a coworker (a smarmy-as-ever Kevin Bacon). Adrift and alone for the first time in his life, Carell takes up residence on a barstool at a demographically unfriendly singles' haunt. The self-pity is enough to interrupt Gosling's idle rich, bar-cruising lothario, and the following makeover is at first a dizzying sort of Pygmalion. Sadly, Crazy, Stupid, Love can't sustain that level of manic invention and eventually settles into something more conventional, but pleasant all the same. Luckily, by then we're invested enough in these characters to cheer for the feel-good ending. (In the suburbs.)

Don't Be Afraid of the Dark ★ ½ Famously dashed together in two weeks, writer Nigel McKeand's 1973 ABC Movie of the Week, Don't Be Afraid of the Dark, was the kind of obscure treat that used to be circulated on bootleg VHS tapes by traumatized teens. A passion project for writer/producer Guillermo del Toro, this long-delayed remake winds up straddling the line between a modest premise and reckless CGI abandon. McKeand's teleplay has been thoroughly del Toro-ized. With countless echoes of Pan's Labyrinth, sad-eyed Sally (Bailee Madison) is tormented by creepy-crawly creatures living in the mansion being renovated by her estranged father (Guy Pearce) and would-be stepmom (Katie Holmes). The screenplay leads us to believe that these preoccupied parents consider the mayhem a figment of Sally's imagination, but director Troy Nixey (a comic-book artist making his feature debut) errs by making the attacks too volatile, defying the story's logic. Why would any sane family remain in this obviously haunted house? Less would've been a lot more. (In the suburbs.)

The Guard ★★★ ½ Suffused with a strain of romantic Irish fatalism, writer/director John Michael McDonagh's debut plunders the clichés of a thousand interracial buddy-cop comedies, emerging with an ode to shabby nobility that's stranger and sadder than expected. It's also fookin' hilarious—or at least that's how Sergeant Gerry Boyle might describe it. Played by Brendan Gleeson in one of the great performances of his career. Boyle's a steely-eyed lout, whiling away the hours in a state of perpetual boredom and wasted disappointment, punctuated by occasional visits from Dublin prostitutes. But when a gang of English cocaine traffickers arrive in town, so does a smooth-talking Southern dandy from the FBI (Don Cheadle, master of the reaction shot). Turns out that, like a plus-sized version of every great Humphrey Bogart and Clint Eastwood character, there's a strict moral code lurking somewhere beneath Boyle's anti-social dissolution. The Guard is raw, profane and strangely moving. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Help ★★ This surprise smash is being enjoyed by an audience that has gone sadly

NOT HALF BAD

Seth Rogen and Joseph Gordon-Levitt almost get it right.

Starring Joseph Gordon-Levitt, Seth Rogen, Anna Kendrick, Bryce Dallas Howard, Philip Baker Hall and Anjelica Huston. Written by Will Reiser. Directed by Jonathan Levine. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

THE PROSPECT OF DYING young is no laughing matter, but in the case of 50/50, it makes for an extremely awkward, heartfelt and funny film.

Directed by Jonathan Levine and written by Will Reiser, it has the rough sting of real life at its (slightly compromised) core. Reiser, a scribe for TV programs like Da Ali G Show (as well as assorted dreck like Garage Band Makeover), was diagnosed with a rare form of cancer in his early 20s. His loyal best friend during the ordeal was the kind of slovenly loudmouth who's usually played in movies by Seth Rogen.

Wait, scratch that. Reiser's best friend really is Seth Rogen, who always seems to turn up in movies as a variation of himself in the first place. This version is Kyle, an Army-jacket–clad slob with a taste for weed and terrible jokes. Rogen's an actor with a very limited range underserved by the months-long barrage of superheroes and giant robots that typically define summer entertainment. On one hand, we should rejoice, as this is a female-driven picture with no special effects. But it's a troubling film all the same. Based on Kathryn Stockett's best seller, The Help takes place in Jackson, Miss., circa 1962, when audience surrogate Skeeter Phelan (Emma Stone) returns home to her family's plantation and has an ideological falling-out with her well-to-do childhood friends over their nasty racist behavior. The slightly icky wish-fulfillment fantasy allows white audiences to rally around Skeeter's do-gooder activism while rendering her peers as cartoon monsters. It's a very pleasant lie, sending you out of the cinema on a high note. But what vexes me is why the lie even needed to be told in the first place. Aren't there enough true stories of heroism from the civil rights era? Is it really appropriate for us to all stand and applaud this courageous, fictional white girl? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Drive ★★★★ Played by Ryan Gosling in a silk scorpion jacket and an omnipresent toothpick, the nameless lead is a Hollywood stunt-driver moonlighting as a robbery wheelman. He's an absurd, larger-than-life archetype, and the giddy pleasure of director Nicholas Winding Refn's entertaining Drive is how in love with its very "movie-ness" this movie is. Set in the present day, yet pulsating with a distinctly 1980s glow, it's a boilerplate genre picture where every shot seems designed to make you nod your head appreciatively and mutter the word "awesome." There's a bag of money and some guns, plus one genuinely terrifying turn by (of all people) Albert Brooks as a quick-tempered gangster. It's romantic, in all definitions of the word, positioning performers as icons in front of expansive Los Angeles landscapes, with Gosling emerging as a Tiger Beat Steve McQueen. OK, so it's a bit self-conscious. But Drive is pulp delirium. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Higher Ground ★★★ The most shocking thing about actress Vera Farmiga's directorial debut is its normalcy. Based on Carolyn S. Briggs' 2002 memoir and set within a tight-knit group of evangelical Christians during the late '70s and early '80s, the movie takes religion as a fact of everyday life. These aren't people we normally see on screen in American films. Church is at the center of their lives, and Farmiga has no interest in passing judgment on them for it. That's Higher Ground's main virtue, and I don't know how it would work at all if she weren't one of the most expressive actresses of our time. So much of the movie is spent watching her watch other people. The picture never settles for easy answers, and these warmly drawn characters are granted a surprising complexity. Farmiga's Corrine is undergoing a crisis of faith, and also one of envy. She longs for the certainty that seems to bring so much comfort and purpose to her fellow parishioners. Like I said, it's different. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

of money is probably all you need to know about the latest Jason Statham vehicle. As mentor to the bald-headed butt-kicker, De Niro is kidnapped by a nefarious sheik, and the ransom is a list of retired SAS agents that Statham must dispatch. Preposterously claiming to be based on a true story (and having no connection to the Sam Peckinpah film of the same name), this muddled thriller isn't just set in 1980, at times it feels like it was made in the '80s. A bevy of indistinguishable contract killers with muttonchop sideburns and lousy facial hair take turns trying to explain the labyrinthine plot mechanics, but the film only comes to life whenever Statham is facing off against Clive Owen's surly British operative, who's probably in such a bad mood all the time because his mustache makes him look like a child molester. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punchline comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Moneyball ★★★ ½ Brad Pitt finally surrenders and turns in the kind of megawatt movie-star performance we've all been waiting for. As a pal noted, "He's playing the role exactly the way Robert Redford would've in the 1970s." Based on Michael Lewis' best seller, Moneyball stars Pitt as Oakland A's general manager Billy Beane, a once-promising player who washed out young. Now he's stuck trying to run a financially crippled franchise in a league where the big teams have gotten so rich that the smaller markets have been priced right out of the competition. All this inside-baseball talk is served up for your consideration by screenwriter Aaron Sorkin, who puts his trademark rapid-fire banter in the service of surprisingly sturdy and traditional underdog-sports-movie formulas. When it's at its best, Moneyball is preposterously entertaining, as Beane and partner in crime Peter Brand (Jonah Hill) hustle sports agents, owners and rival GMs. It's a movie about the game of baseball that contains surprisingly little actual baseball. It's more like The Bad News Bears with an economics degree. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Straw Dogs ★ It takes a lot of nerve to remake Sam Peckinpah's queasy 1971 masterpiece, a film so haunting and upsetting it seems to have sprung right from the director's tormented subconscious. But former film critic Rod Lurie, perpetrator of unintentional comedies like The and extremely wide appeal—his basso-profundo line readings never fail to send me into giggling fits, often regardless of context. (Yes, I even laughed at The Green Hornet.)

Joseph Gordon-Levitt stars as Adam, an uptight producer at a Seattle public radio station. Lacking a driver's license and a good many social graces, Adam relies on Kyle for rides to work and a fair amount of terrible advice, typically involving shower masturbation or other topics better left unsaid. Theirs is the kind of easy-to-hang-with, tough-to-explain friendship that's lasted a lifetime, but doesn't make much sense from the outside.

It's especially puzzling to Rachel, played by Bryce Dallas Howard with even more haterade than she brought to her recent supervillain role in The Help. She's a phony, would-be artist in a relationship with Adam, and initial arguments about bathroom etiquette are obviously no match for an impending cancer diagnosis. 50/50 falters hard in these opening reels, as a braver movie would've offered some empathy for Howard's status. What do you do when a causal fling suddenly involves chemotherapy? When is it suddenly not socially acceptable to cut your losses and bolt?

To my great disappointment, 50/50 floors it right over this particular speed bump and consigns the girlfriend role to a cheating, easily dismissible hussy. Sure, it's great fun to watch best-buddy Kyle employ all manners of exotic profanity, calling her out on her transgressions. But it's also way too easy.

Exceedingly well cast, 50/50 is nothing if not great at letting up-and-coming movie stars play directly to their strengths.

The movie gets better as it goes along. Withdrawn Adam lacks an emotional output as he wrestles with life and death. Enter a novice therapist, Katherine, fresh out of college and fumbling with her first patient in that hyperattentive, Type-A fashion that Anna Kendrick has a knack for making adorable. Exceedingly well cast, 50/50 is nothing if not great at letting up-and-coming movie stars play directly to their strengths.

This means that Gordon-Levitt gets to quietly internalize his anger and confusion at being a healthy young man who's suddenly tossed into a medical machine that offers little empathy or understanding. He's aghast at being shrunk down to a statistic, and his odds for survival give the movie its unfortunate title.

But despite Adam's strained relationship with his overattentive mother (Anjelica Huston), the real caretaker here is Rogen, whose character might be called Kyle but in all honesty should just be named Seth. Every bit the fumbling class-clown, he's also got a shabby nobility that comes through when the chips are down. The movie is best when illustrating what it's like when the last person you expected to be of any help turns out to be the only one who's there for you when it really matters.

Levine, who most recently helmed the disarming early '90s nostalgia piece The Wackness, is a bit too slick for comfort. The last thing this movie needs are sad-face montages cut to Radiohead songs. He at least knows how to stay out of the way for long enough to let his talented cast shine, and Rogen's unexpected decency, which can often only be expressed through shoulder-punching obscenities, grows more quietly moving as the picture progresses.

"Did you ever see Terms of Endearment?" Gordon-Levitt asks Huston, in a terrible conversational attempt to prepare her for his diagnosis. The shaggy, laughing-through-the-tears M.O. of James L. Brooks' cable classic is obviously what 50/50 is striving for. Half the time it even gets there. ✖✖✖

Contender and Resurrecting the Champ, doesn't quite see it that way, as he lobotomizes Peckinpah's angsty magnum opus to an asinine blue-state revenge melodrama. James Marsden takes the Dustin Hoffman role, here reconceived as a suave screenwriter who moves to Blackwater, Miss., with his actress wife (Kate Bosworth). Their flashy, big-city airs earn the scorn of the local yokels, who worship high school football and hate fancy book learnin'. Lurie doesn't even attempt to muster the original picture's troubling moral complexity, instead indulging in laughably grotesque redneck stereotypes. (I'd wager he'd never set foot in the South before shooting started.) It's a lame, delusional, wish-fulfillment fantasy of a Hollywood hotshot learning how to toughen up and kick some culture-war butts in the Bible belt. Peckinpah is rolling in his grave. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Tucker & Dale vs. Evil ★★ Eighty minutes is a long time to spend on the same joke. This splattery horror send-up by director Eli Craig stars Firefly's Alan Tudyk and Reaper's Tyler Labine as accident-prone bumpkins mistaken for serial killers by preppy college campers. The gentle-spirited hayseeds only want to spend their weekend repairing a shack inherited by Tudyk's beer-swilling Tucker, but in contrived Three's Company fashion, the nubile 20-something city-folk misinterpret every gesture as a psychotic overture. Rinse. Wash. Repeat. Time and again the kids' pop-culture–inspired prejudice against hillbillies leads to a mildly amusing moment in which our kindly heroes appear to be deranged. Worse, the campers have a bad habit of accidentally getting themselves killed in gruesome pratfalls—like tripping and falling headfirst into a woodchipper, for example. There are a few appealing performances here, but Craig keeps circling back to the same gruesome gag with rapidly diminishing returns. Playing like a promising short dragged out to feature length, Tucker & Dale vs. Evil beats a dead horse all the way to the glue factory. (At Coolidge Corner.)

What Dreams May Come

Tim Burton's adaptation of Alice in Wonderland tried to give the classic children's story a darker spin, but ultimately got lost in sloppy 3-D translation. Besides, Dreamchild already beat him to it. Gavin Millar's shadowy take on the tale features an 80-year-old Alice looking back on her relationship with Lewis Carroll, complete with a creepy undertone that Disney wouldn't dare animate. The Brattle Theatre concludes its Peter & Alice series with a screening of the flick on Oct. 13. Casey Rackham

UNTAMABLE

Indie-rock trailblazers stake new territory.

Wild Flag plays at Paradise Rock Club on Oct. 14.

WILD FLAG HAD BARELY flown when both critics and fans began hailing the Oregon-based quartet as an indie-rock supergroup.

"I don't think any of us saw that coming," keyboardist Rebecca Cole says. "We didn't sit down and figure out some matrix of bands for this magic one. It seemed to happen really naturally. Honestly, I didn't know at the time we were starting a band!"

What drew them together was an interconnected trail of shared bands and friendships. Guitarist Carrie Brownstein and drummer Janet Weiss came from Sleater-Kinney, once dubbed America's best rock band in Time magazine. After that trio's 2006 breakup, Brownstein acted on Portlandia and blogged for NPR. Then the pair tapped

Cole, Weiss' bandmate in '60s cover group the Shadow Mortons, to record instrumentals for a documentary film.

When the director requested they add vocals, they called D.C.-based musician Mary Timony, who once led the Boston trio Helium and formed the Spells with Brownstein.

"I remember listening to that [recording] with Janet and Carrie in Portland and laughing, 'Will you listen to that—we sound like a band!'" Cole says. "We thought it would be fun to see what happens with all four of us in the room together."

Timony flew out West, hashed out ideas with the other three, and Wild Flag was born. Beyond just looking good on paper, the group has released one of the year's most refreshing rock albums.

"The sound is what found us," Brownstein and her mates proclaim on "Romance," the spastically catchy lead track from Wild Flag's eponymous debut. "The sound is the blood between me and you."

"The choice to come back to music is a very exciting one," says Cole, who hadn't toured in the few years since she left Portland's the Minders. Brownstein and Timony had also put their musical pursuits on hold. Weiss quit her gig with Pavement leader Stephen Malkmus' group the Jicks in order to launch Wild Flag. "Even if you have a hundred bands," Cole muses, "how often do you start one brand new, from scratch, with your friends?"

Their enthusiasm runs rampant. In contrast to the tone and tenor of Sleater-Kinney's scrappy rush and Helium's downbeat haze, Wild Flag conveys a more danceable, carefree feel than fans might expect. Brownstein throws in her best Patti Smith–style yelps and even slips in such stock lines as "Shake, shimmy, shake" and "Let the good times roll."

"I wouldn't have thought we'd make such an upbeat record, but looking back, it's a record of coming back to something you love," Cole says. "In life, that's when you feel most alive is when you're involved with doing the thing you care most about."

Echoing the Shadow Mortons' tequila-fueled party vibe, Wild Flag even accommodates Weiss and Cole's love for vintage garage rock, girl-group harmonies and the Rolling Stones. The pair harmonize behind the contrasting lead vocals of Brownstein and Timony, who brings psychedelic diversity to songs like "Glass Tambourine."

"We're all swirling around, having fun with the arrangement on that one," Cole says of the Weiss-pumped jam vehicle. "That's a song for the first four minutes. And after that, who knows what's going to happen with 'Glass Tambourine' when we play it live."

At the same time, Wild Flag largely reflects the Spartan riot-grrrl attack of Sleater-Kinney, down to the lack of bass guitar. Cole instead plays keyboard bass ("A lot of that is subtle work, keeping the song on track") as well as electric piano and organ that she often runs through distortion effects. Yet she plays a clean, simple melody in "Endless Talk" that's a direct nod to the Cars' New Wave pop. "I listen to that first Cars record at the gym at least once a month," Cole admits.

Wild Flag heads out on a tour that hits the Paradise on Oct. 14. "I feel really lucky and grateful that people are out there," Cole says. "This isn't going to be the most amazing record we ever make. I hope it's a starting point." ✖✖✖

How Swede It Is

Up for Debate Jens Lekman is quite the world traveler. These days, the Swedish native resides in Australia, but he's presently touring the U.S. and Europe for his new record, An Argument With Myself. His music reflects his wanderlust, covering all the sonic ground from mandolins to flutes to reggae beats while weaving relatable stories. The indie-pop itinerant visits the Armory on Oct. 8. Melissa Herrick

Abstracted Development

Out of the Blue They say an artist's work is always evolving. For recent MassArt graduate Vanessa Irzyk, her next step means a shift from figurative paintings to a body of energetic works that combine painting and collage. With an eye on the seductive and whimsical, her most recent pieces use abstract forms to challenge color, space and light. Explore the frontier of local contemporary art at Irzyk's solo show, Moving Forward: New & Recent Work, at the Distillery Gallery through Nov. 1. Maya Phillips

OFF THE RACK

Know Thyself

The level of fabulosity was in the mesosphere at Saks Fifth Avenue when the store hosted Fashion's Night Out, with cocktails and clothing playing equal roles in the mad socializing of such stylish individuals as blonde beauties Maureen Griffin Balsbaugh and Diane Allen, smokin' hot news reporter Ryan Shulteis, hair deity Sal Malafronte, martini man Bill Emery, party pair Ashley and Paul Bernon, the breathtakingly beautiful Daniela Winston, lovebug Chrystyna Kassaraba, jewelry designer Nicole Rueda-Watts, the über-sexy Marci Duarte, the absurdly good-looking Christine and Billy Meara, fashion icon Doris Yaffe, redheaded siren Joanna Prager, tall drink of water Mark Moosburner and one woman who referred to Nantucket as "Cirrhosis by the Sea." Meanwhile, Neiman Marcus, the Taj and Lord-knows-who-else hosted similarly sparkly affairs, and all of Newbury Street was blocked off and lined with luxury cars on loan from Herb Chambers (who, as someone posted on Facebook earlier in the day, was apparently losing his temper in public). The evening's funniest remark came from the woman who said, "I'm on the cusp of Virgo and Libra; I'm a bitch who makes lists."

Being Shellfish

If oysters are aphrodisiacs, everyone went home horny but not hungry when the Island Creek Oyster Foundation hosted its Friends for Haiti Fund-raiser on Duxbury Beach.

Guests got to chow on seafood prepared by celebrity chefs like Jody Adams, Joanne Chang, Ming Tsai, Michael Schlow and Jeremy Sewall, as well as rub elbows with the likes of hotel scions Tedd and Todd Saunders and the former's stunning wife, Ella, statuesque brunette Less Arnold and her equally gorgeous partner-in-crime Elaine Burke, real estate babe Belinda Hunsinger, South End trendsetters Chip and Alison Batchelder, lots of people in painfully preppy clothes and one man whose belt buckle was shaped like a bivalve.

Despite a slight hitch with the bar, it was a delightful evening, and if there's a baby boom in Duxbury nine months from now, you'll know why.

Bess, You My Gala Now

The American Repertory Theater put the "A.R.T." in "party" with its gala celebration for Diane Paulus' Broadway-bound production of Porgy and Bess. In fact, even the most jaded celebrity and international socialite (and there were several of both) found it difficult to recall a more high-octane evening.

The tent at the A.R.T. gala

Sarah and Marco Morgese at the A.R.T. gala

The three-layered affair began in the jaw-droppingly gorgeous gardens of Jim Bailey and RoAnn Costin's Cambridge home and continued with the performance (which earned a deservedly wild standing ovation). Then it was back to the house (by this point lit up like a Christmas tree) for a lavish feast under a tent, surrounded by flowers and fountains and a 10-foot gleaming-gold statue of the goddess Diana that one guest said had once stood on top of Madison Square Garden.

Needless to say, the guest list was equally impressive and included the evening's cochairs, the devilishly handsome Kevin Cole Costin and Cambridge grande dame Ann Gund, Harvard head honcha Drew Gilpin Faust, the swanlike Stephanie Warburg, newlyweds Marco and Sarah Morgese (six days after her father, the governor, performed their wedding ceremony in the Berkshires), wildly sexy wine merchants Hadley and TJ Douglas, producer and fashion plate Rebecca Millikowsky and her other half, Nathan, the exquisite Katherine Chapman and her office supply mogul, Tom Stemberg, interior design avatar James Swan and just about everybody else with juice in this town.

Despite the requisite jokes about Bostonians deigning to cross the river (one of the better examples: "Did you have to go through customs?"), the repartee was generally witty. After everyone was wined and dined, the cast showed up, including Audra McDonald (who's won more Tony awards than I personally would want to dust) and her Broadway comrades-in-arms Norm Lewis and David Alan Grier (whose portrayal of Sporting Life made me completely forget about In Living Color).

The cherry on the ice cream sundae: It turned out to be RoAnn Costin's birthday, and (thankfully) Ann Gund told everyone to be quiet while the cast sang "Happy Birthday." Not quite Gershwin perhaps, but an encore nonetheless. ✖✖✖

Train in Vain

Memory is a slippery, deceitful thing, like an eel trying to sell you a car. To my recollection, my teenage self was confident, well-groomed and lathered in shimmering fumes of sexual charisma. Then I look at photo albums and see a sulking Harry Potter in flannel, and I realize the brain is a strumpet.

Teenagers are typically sinkholes of cliché, and I conformed as hard as I could. For instance, after my freshman year of college, I spent a month backpacking around Europe. It was a lemming's itinerary of grand museums and the sort of hostel you'd need a tetanus shot on check-out—the same tour undertaken by every other 18-year-old with screeching hormones and a credit in art history. To save money for admission fees, I slept on train platforms and washed my socks in restaurant sinks. But I remember sitting in the sun outside the Hofburg Palace in Vienna, the flush of golden wine in my blood and my head full of Klimt, thinking that this was, truly, a life well-lived.

Of course, I was utterly wrong. I now know that if you're sharing a sleeping area with an angry Dutch junkie clawing at his own skin, you need a new travel agent. The sight of sunrise brushing the Bavarian Alps with shades of amber and milk thistle is an incomparable blessing, but so is having toilet paper. That lesson in mind, this issue looks at four superb New England destinations, all of which boast excellent menus and high thread counts.

THE SKIMMER MAKES A BARTENDER PART CRAFTSMAN, PART ASSASSIN.

TALE OF TWO CITIES

ON THE 20TH anniversary of the publication of Sebastian Junger's The Perfect Storm, Gloucester is a very different town than it once was. The Crow's Nest—hangout of the ill-fated crew—still packs in tourists. But so does Divine Day Spa two doors down. Cape Pond Ice still sells its "Coolest Guys Around" T-shirts, but across the street, mogul Jim Davis of New Balance fame is trying to build a boutique hotel. Fresh hot spots offer highest-grade sushi, craft brews and, of course, the catch of the day, courtesy of men and women working the most dangerous job in the world. "We have our fiesta and greasy-pole contest," says Joey Ciaramitaro, creator of the blog Good Morning Gloucester. "But we're also third on American Style Magazine's list of top small-city arts destinations."

SQUARE MEAL

Brussels native Nhon Ma grew up with proper waffles, but he couldn't find a suitable replacement after moving to the States. When nostalgia finally got the best of him, the Harvard grad—and the son of the first Asian chef to earn a Michelin star in Europe—partnered with high school friend Bertrand Lempkowicz to open Zinneken's in Harvard Square. Their yeasted, baked-to-order waffles are brimming with pearl-sugar cubes that give the dough its trademark sweetness and pockets of crunch. Try one with berries, crushed Oreos, or the house specialty with whipped cream, Belgian chocolate and the Belgian caramel-ginger cookie-spread Speculoos. ELIZABETH BOMZE

HOME-GROWN

Life in the weeds

THINK OF IT AS A vegetarian spin on nose-to-tail eating: In her new book, Wild Flavors, chef Didi Emmons focuses on 46 plants and their near-total edibility through their lifecycle, from seed to flower. Emmons says her cookbook is an attempt to "prod and tantalize and entertain, to get people more connected to their food." The Haley House Bakery Café executive chef wants readers to appreciate the uses of local herbs and weeds, from lemongrass to stinging nettles.

Emmons' role model is local legend Eva Sommaripa, a Dartmouth-based herb farmer. In addition to providing high-quality greens to some of Boston's top chefs, Sommaripa's been living a sustainable, resourceful life for more than four decades. Emmons follows her example by touting such back-to-basics virtues as thrift, community building, bartering (Sommaripa hasn't shopped for food in years) and preserving. Engagingly written and easy to use, Wild Flavors is also a celebration of the power of friendship.

JOURNEYMAN'S latest project will have a separate entrance and identity, but Backbar will serve up food prepared in the same celebrated kitchen. This time, the focus is on charcuterie and cheeses to pair with seasonal craft cocktails. Bar manager Sam Treadway, a veteran of Eastern Standard, says that when the space opens in November, it'll have 32 seats, industrial yet comfortable decor and a backbar that's "like an abstract piece of art," displaying bottles and vintage barware.

ALSO SET TO OPEN IN NOVEMBER: All Star Pizza Bar in Inman Square. The sibling to the All Star Sandwich Bar will feature pies topped with the likes of Buffalo duck confit and blue cheese.

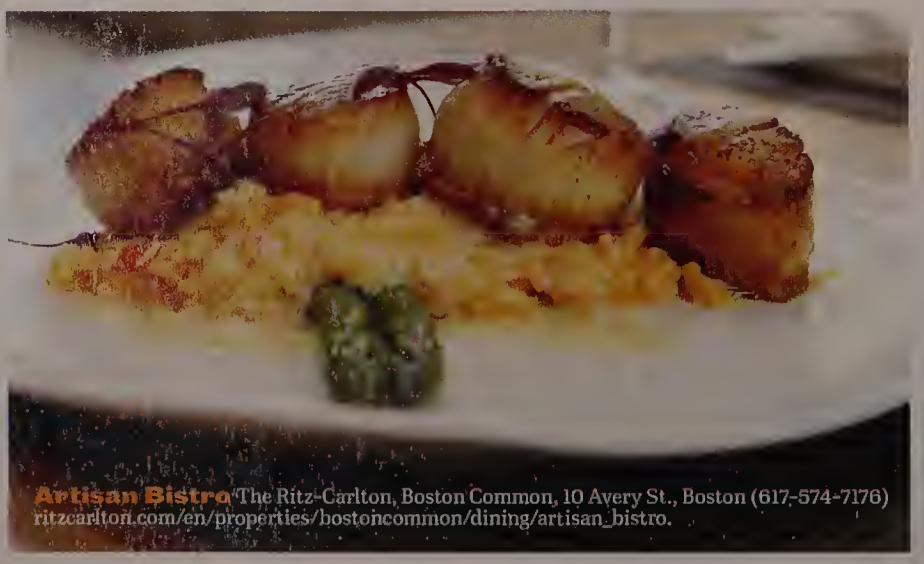
First Taste

A SECOND ACT

The danger of opening a restaurant in the Theater District comes in being pigeonholed as a pre- or post-show spot. John Christinzio, manager at the Ritz-Carlton's newly launched Artisan Bistro, experienced that fate when the Avery Street space was Jer-Ne, an upscale and oft-overlooked restaurant/bar that closed after 10 years this summer. "Our menu was all over the place," he laments. "There just wasn't a focus, and I think that confused people."

Branding the largely renovated spot as a bistro may not be cutting-edge, but it does give it focus, and extensive renovations make the space feel clean and modern. "There isn't anything like this in the neighborhood, so I think we're a welcome addition," he says. "People are recognizing us as a place to eat, not just a place to go to the bar."

Artisan Bistro's layout is more open that its predecessor, but the extensive use of luxurious, caramel-hued leather lends warmth. "For the concept to work, it was important to make a clear separation between the bar and the dining room," adds Christinzio, marking the partition. On one side, slanted mirrors loom above the bar and splash energy into a subdued collection of booths and four-tops. Industrial light fixtures are the unexpected focal point of the room, glowing against the black-washed walls. It's a stark contrast from the Ritz's other new spot, Avery Bar, which has the airy feel of a '60s living room. The variance should encourage people to float between them as the night progresses.



"THERE ARE CLASSICS, BUT WE'RE TRYING TO HAVE FUN WITH IT."

Chef de cuisine Adam Kube's menu plays with typical French bistro dishes, but he doesn't fully commit to the genre. "There are classics, but we're trying to have fun with it," he says. "It's more important to me to show off with ingredients that are in season and local." A rotating list of daily specials includes hearty plates like pappardelle tossed with duck confit ($25) and beef stroganoff dotted with fresh beets ($27). "Our regulars look forward to knowing that they can get their favorite dish at least once a week, and I think it makes for a stronger menu."

"To a lot of people, this is their nightly dining room," Christinzio adds, referencing the 400 people who own luxury condominiums in the hotel. "We've been busy all night."

Second Look

OFF THE RACK

Boston-based consignment chain Second Time Around's boutique in New York City's Upper East Side is now the subject of Bravo's Fashion Hunters. Assistant manager Ambria Miscia, a Hopinkton native, is the fan favorite.

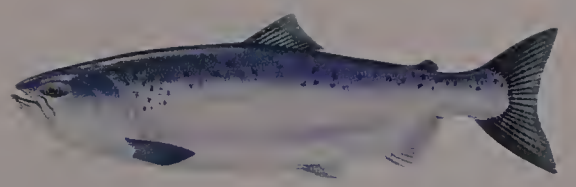
Is it fair to compare Boston's style to New York's or L.A.'s?

Boston is definitely more conservative. It's more oxfords and khakis. I'd call it contemporary but safe. There's plenty of really well-dressed people in Boston, though. L.A. is more easy-going with lots of jersey and cotton, and then New York is just a wild card. You can't compete with the emerging designers from all over the world in New York, or the women who dress for Bill Cunningham.

What was the most amazing thing to ever pass through your store?

There was an orange silk and wool blend Versace gown that has to have been kept in a museum. Of course it was my size, but it was $700, and I couldn't afford it. And then it sold right away. It hurt.

What are the top three items that your customers ask for?



Diane von Furstenberg wrap dresses, Chanel quilted handbags and Marni, Marni, Marni. Everything Marni, but mostly jackets. We can't keep them in stock.

Are you worried about being edited to look like a bitch?

In general, I'm not someone who cares about my image, but I'm worried that people will think I'm too materialistic. There's more to me than fashion, but I think that might be hard to see.

Pop Off

Few wines flash more class than Champagne. The real stuff will cost you, but you'll rarely go wrong, no matter which bottle you buy. So why do only a handful of well-known labels dominate shelves? Familiarity. Brand recognition drives purchasing in this category. The good news is that there are droves of lesser-known Champagnes perfect for the adventurous sipper. This is the time to buy, as prices drop in October while stores compete for holiday buyers. If you have someone special you want to wow, try one of these recent blind-tasting standouts:

Heidsieck Monopole "Blue Top" Brut NV ($45, BROOKLINE LIQUOR MART) This venerable producer flies under the radar, but the current version of Blue Top features a rich, spicy mélange of apple, pear and brown bread. Heidsieck is always pinot-dominated, and this wine is a clear example. A lively yet silky drink with lingering mineral complexity.

Louis Roederer "Brut Premier" NV ($50, BAUER WINE) Roederer stands out among the major houses because it's a family company that, thanks to extensive vineyard ownership, only needs to purchase a small amount of outside grapes. Firmly structured and smoky with a nutty, brioche aroma, Brut Premier's flavors are evocative of cherries, lemons and sweet spices. Bone dry with fine intensity and a long finish.

Besserat de Bellefon "Cuvee des Moines" Brut NV ($58, THE URBAN GRAPE) This boutique Champagne is hard to beat, and even harder to find. Earthy with aromas of caramel, apple, tangerine and herbs, it's a delicious, velvety wine whose frothy flavors linger. Subtle and understated, this is the also the driest of the four.

Pol Roger "White Foil" Brut NV ($50, FEDERAL WINE) This versatile Champagne has the most assertive bubble structure of the bunch. From another family-owned house, this signature White Foil has fine, understated toasty flavors, with red apple, lemon and citrusy, nutty elements all in balance. This is a more medium-bodied Champagne that can partner with raw shellfish or seafood in creamy sauces.

Beauty

A Fresh Start

If you swooned over the makeup at Boston Fashion Week, you likely have Mariolga Pantazopoulos to thank. The long-time Boston makeup artist debuted her new line, define:beauty cosmetics, at seven different shows, and her products are gearing up for a public launch in January at the Loft Salon + Day Spa and online. Industry insiders are waiting anxiously, as the line has been two years in the making and includes eyeliners, lip tints, cream blushes, indelible eye shadows and more. A firm believer in the essentials, Pantazopoulos is starting off with core colors that work on all skin tones and can be applied anywhere on the face—foundations double as eye shadows and bronzers, and cheek stains make for great lip tints. "The cream eye shadow can be as sheer as a veil of color, but when it's layered, it gets more and more intense. With one pot you can do two different looks," says Pantazopoulos. "My case went down from an entire suitcase of makeup to one little makeup bag." Prepare to free yourself from the unnecessary.

ASK THE EXPERT

This Halloween, party-planner BRYAN RAFANELLI is throwing a Marc Jacobs benefit in Provincetown for the restoration of the Town Hall (he'll probably dress up as a fisherman for the occasion, he says). But for a more traditional holiday bash in your home, here are his low-cost tips.

DECOR

- REPLACE ALL THE LIGHTS IN THE MAIN ROOMS WITH RED BULBS.
- USE PLASTIC DRACULA TEETH IN PLACE OF STANDARD NAPKIN RINGS.
- FOR POTIONS, FILL VASES WITH DYED WATER AND PLACE AROUND THE ROOM.

FOOD

- APPLES WITH BITE: QUARTER AND CORE APPLES. CUT A WEDGE FROM THE SKIN SIDE OF EACH QUARTER AND PRESS SLIVERED ALMONDS IN PLACE FOR TEETH. COAT IN LEMON JUICE TO KEEP FROM BROWNING.
- STEAK KABOBS CAN BE DRESSED WITH BLOODY-MARY SAUCE FOR THE FRESH-KILLED LOOK.
- PARTY FAVORS IN BROOKLINE BAKES A RED VELVET DRACULA CAKE.
- TRY ROLLING CAKE POPS IN COUNT CHOCULA CEREAL.

DRINK

- CUSTOMIZE YOUR OWN WINE LABELS WITH SPOOKY NAMES LIKE TRANSYLVANIA TEA OR SPIDER VENOM (OR CANADIAN CABERNET SAUVIGNON).
- ENLIVEN PUNCH BY FREEZING BLACK PLASTIC SPIDERS IN ICE CUBES AND SERVING IN A CAULDRON. USE DRY ICE UNDER THE BOWL TO CREATE A DISCOMFORTING HAZE.

Drink of the Moment

Over the Counter

Were anyone to fear that pomp and formality were dominating Boston's liquor scene, they only need enter TC's Lounge. Between a Fart Alarm™ and a pair of stress ball–esque bosoms lies a list of seven house shots that ensure flowing banter and glowing faces. The recipe for their signature Oxycontin hangs overhead, while the others, including Liquid Cocaine and Johnny's Blackout ($6.50 each), rely on the lure of their names' mystique.

Stallone's Cop Land plays in the background as bartender Arien Sangma explains how he'd tackle the drug-themed trifecta. He'd start with LIQUID COCAINE (1/3 Bacardi 151, 1/3 Jägermeister and 1/3 Rumple Minze). The minty, licorice-scented swill acts as a "kickstarter." Indeed, it leaves the drinker feeling reanimated, like after an accidentally swigged gulp of Listerine.

Next up is the oft-ordered OXYCONTIN, made with 1/3 Bacardi O, 1/3 Black Haus, 1/3 Triple Sec (not to mention splashes of orange juice, sour mix and Sprite). With a taste like citrusy cough syrup, this shooter is favored by the ladies.

Brave survivors might then order JOHNNY'S BLACKOUT—a Jack Daniels and Johnnie Walker Black combo. It's named after a friend who favored the two spirits and was always first to black out at parties (naturally). The trio's most masculine, the shot tastes like a not-wholly-unpleasant blend of boot leather and aristocratic ashtray. ("The third shot's taste really doesn't matter anyway," says Sangma.)

Buzzed and buoyant, conquerors of the triple-edged binge will wonder, "Now where's this Johnny, and where did he put my apartment?"

PUNCH DRUNCH

A QUESTION FOR THE GENERAL PUBLIC: Can someone please explain the differences between brunch and "drunch"? The latter term has been popping up around town lately, and most recently assaulted my eyes on a special menu at Blue Inc. As a regular enjoyer of the in-between meal, I can assure you that if you aren't boozing during brunch, you're doing it wrong, and coining a cheesy new term doesn't make it special. It's like you're Gretchen Wieners in Mean Girls, and I'm Regina George. Except I'm sipping a mimosa full of cynicism and haterade. I propose that the term drunch be put back to bed.

WHAT A PILL

On the dangers of psychotropic medication

ONE MAY WONDER IF some psychiatrists might name their kids Eli and Lilly in honor of the company that has scored gigantic profits from pills, notably that superstar psychotropic Prozac. In this detailed, frightening book, Robert Whitaker looks at the ways psychiatric woes—depression, ADHD and schizophrenia—have been reconceived as a "chemical imbalance," leading to patients being prescribed an everlasting regimen of psychotropic drugs.

Whitaker reports that these medications (or cocktails thereof) are often useless or dangerous. Happily for Big Pharma, they can lead to further drugs to counteract the negative side effects

Anatomy of an Epidemic
by Robert Whitaker

Whitaker lives in Cambridge.

they've produced. ADHD medications appear to increase a young child's chances of becoming bipolar (and, of course, there's a drug for that). Moreover, many overmedicated people end up constrained by permanent disability (SSDI). In Finland and Wales, statistical evidence shows that programs involving low medication and more human therapy allow more sufferers to return to normal lives.

Citing such research, the author shows that although psychotropics have a role, a reliance on them makes some patients worse, while a wise alternative could be shorter-term treatment. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 318: "First, in the 1980s, the prescribing of stimulants to 'hyperactive' children took off. Next, in the early 1990s, psychiatrists began regularly prescribing SSRIs to teenagers. But that meant prepubertal children weren't being prescribed these new wonder drugs, and in 1997, The Wall Street Journal reported that the manufacturers of SSRIs were 'taking aim at a controversial new market: children.' The drug firms were 'preparing their medications in easy-to-swallow forms that will be more palatable to even the youngest tykes,' the newspaper said, with Eli Lilly formulating a 'minty liquid' Prozac for the tots to down."

THE INN CROWD

A culinary gem a mere hour away

COUNTRY TIME A pastoral setting creates a relaxing atmosphere.

AMONG NEW HAMPSHIRE'S many blessings—Squam Lake, highway liquor stores, a state motto in the imperative mood—is the grilled tuna loin at the Bedford Village Inn. A stone's throw from the zipping asphalt of I-293, the inn is the cross-pollination of a 19th-century farm with millions of dollars in contractor fees, resulting in a tasteful setting for a gem of a New England restaurant. And, being a mere hour from Boston, it's an easy weekend jaunt for roving foodies.

Strolling across the courtyard between the restaurant and the inn, guests pass through the sort of country garden that would make a gnome froth with envy. In January, it's home to an ice bar, but in the fall, the courtyard is dotted with pumpkins, late flowers and bridal parties posing for the camera. The inn itself is a converted yellow barn, and two great silos stand, colossus-like, against the main hall. If it weren't for the proximity of the highway, there'd be little to prevent the scene from tipping into the realm of, if not the twee, then at least, the bedtime storybook.

The main hall is a three-story affair festooned with dark timber beams, but unless you've booked a party there, you'll likely spend most of your time in your lodgings. As well as offering a private residence, the inn has suites of differing grades, all with flat-screen TVs and whirlpool baths. The Summit Suite, for example, is a full apartment spun out of plush wallpaper, naïf rustic paintings and, in the bathroom, a quarry's worth of marble. Its bathtub is deep enough to appear seaworthy. Other amenities—a brick fireplace, functional kitchen and second bedroom—add up to make a typical country lodge seem, in comparison, like Andersonville Prison. And the correspondence holds for breakfast. One of

✓ Traveler's Checks

If you visit on a weekend, be braced for brides. The inn is a popular wedding venue.

The restaurant boasts a full bakery and 8,000-bottle wine cellar.

The signature dessert, a "chocolate bag," is significantly more refined than it sounds, consisting of an open dark-chocolate box filled with mousse, cake and berries.

chief reasons Bostonians visit the inn is chef Benjamin Knack's cuisine.

Formerly of Sel de la Terre, L'Espalier and Beacon Hill Bistro, Knack rose to national attention when he placed third on season seven of Hell's Kitchen (Blue Inc.'s Jason Santos came in second). He moved north this past summer to helm the inn's three restaurants, including an English-style tavern and a modern wine bar.

"Flavors should be big and bold," says Knack. "And the majority of people should enjoy them, so no foie-gras macaroons."

The tavern is a nest of duck prints, warm hues and brass rails, while the wine bar, with its cherry wood and gold-flecked wallpaper, wouldn't look out of place in the Financial District. Truly serious gourmands, though, should opt for one of the seven dining rooms, most of which are intimate, fire-lit spaces with white tablecloths and lush upholstery. Appetizers like scallops with corn puree and squid-ink vinaigrette, or gnocchi with crawfish and chorizo hold up to anything plated in the most culinary pockets of Boston, while the entrees—Kurobuta pork, sushi-grade yellowfin, local vegetables oozing with carotene and chlorophyll—stand on ingredients. "You see fava beans," says Knack, "you taste fava beans. I don't like to cover things up. I like things to taste how they're supposed to taste. Not freeze-dried, crumbled and powdered."

This lack of fuss deepens the lavish flavors instead of masking them. Coupled with the relaxed romance of the backdrop, it's hard to stand up from dessert without feeling like the future holds many a roadtrip to New Hampshire. ✖✖✖

The Salty Pig
130 Dartmouth St., Boston
(617-536-6200)
thesaltypig.com

PORCINE LANGUAGE Choose from a variety of charcuterie options.

Emily Knudsen

ON THE CHINESE CALENDAR, the next year of the pig isn't until 2019. For Bostonian diners, Babe's time in the spotlight has already come (and gone, some might say). An urge to dine on swine has overtaken the foodie sect, and area restaurants have obliged, providing pork belly in every conceivable form and flavor. The folks behind the Salty Pig have gone whole hog into the trend.

The eatery's space, which has housed a number of fairly short-lived restaurants, holds a soupçon of whimsy, with chalk doodles on massive black buttresses and Far Side cartoons wallpapering the restroom. Behind the bar stands an open kitchen. The sight of busy cooks and the sensation of heat emanating from the pizza oven will help any patron work up an appetite.

Nearly a dozen varieties of charcuterie beckon from the top of the Pig's menu. Over three visits, I crisscrossed the list, returning to favorites, trying additions and lamenting options that had disappeared. The best choices included Massachusetts' own SP Kitchen mortadellina ($4), an exquisite blend of minced pork and garlic embedded with delicate rounds of fat and a generous quantity of pistachios. Sadly, on a subsequent visit it had been ousted by a more ordinary, far less tasty mortadella from Bologna, Italy. But a second addition, Benton's 24-month-pasteurized baked ham ($4)—silky in texture, sweet and savory—more than compensated for the mortadellina's departure. Other selections included a full-flavored Berkshire pork pâté ($4), a tender, smoky speck ($4) from the Alto Adige, fiery soppressata ($3) from Campania and two standouts from Iowa's La Quercia: a rich jamón serrano ($5) and a tantalizingly spiced coppa picante ($4). Crunchy, mildly sweet house-made pickles provided a pleasant texture and flavor contrast.

It's disheartening that the rest of the menu struggles to reach the level of the charcuterie. Three meatballs ($12) stayed on message, combining flavor and moist consistency in a garlicky tomato sauce. But the burrata appetizer ($10), a tiny serving topped with two quarters of an heirloom tomato, disappointed and wasn't improved by a garnish of compressed watermelon and basil-fennel oil. While a sopressata pizza ($11) hit the spot with a crisp crust and a delicious topping of basil, tomato and creamy mozzarella, the clam pizza ($13) missed the mark, its few fragments of shellfish buried under a jungle of arugula. Spaghetti carbonara is a sinful dish to be honored in the comfort-food hall of fame, but the Salty Pig's version ($14) lacked richness, and its promised guanciale only appeared in trace amounts. In contrast, a pig trotter ragoût ($12) delivered a bold, chili-infused punch with a sauce that enlivened the meat. Even so, while gelatinous fat has a finely unctuous feel and flavor, the stray gristly cube sometimes made for an unpleasant bite. A dry pork belly dish ($15) and a grilled boneless beef short rib ($17) proved that tweaks ought to be made on the sauceless side of the menu, as well.

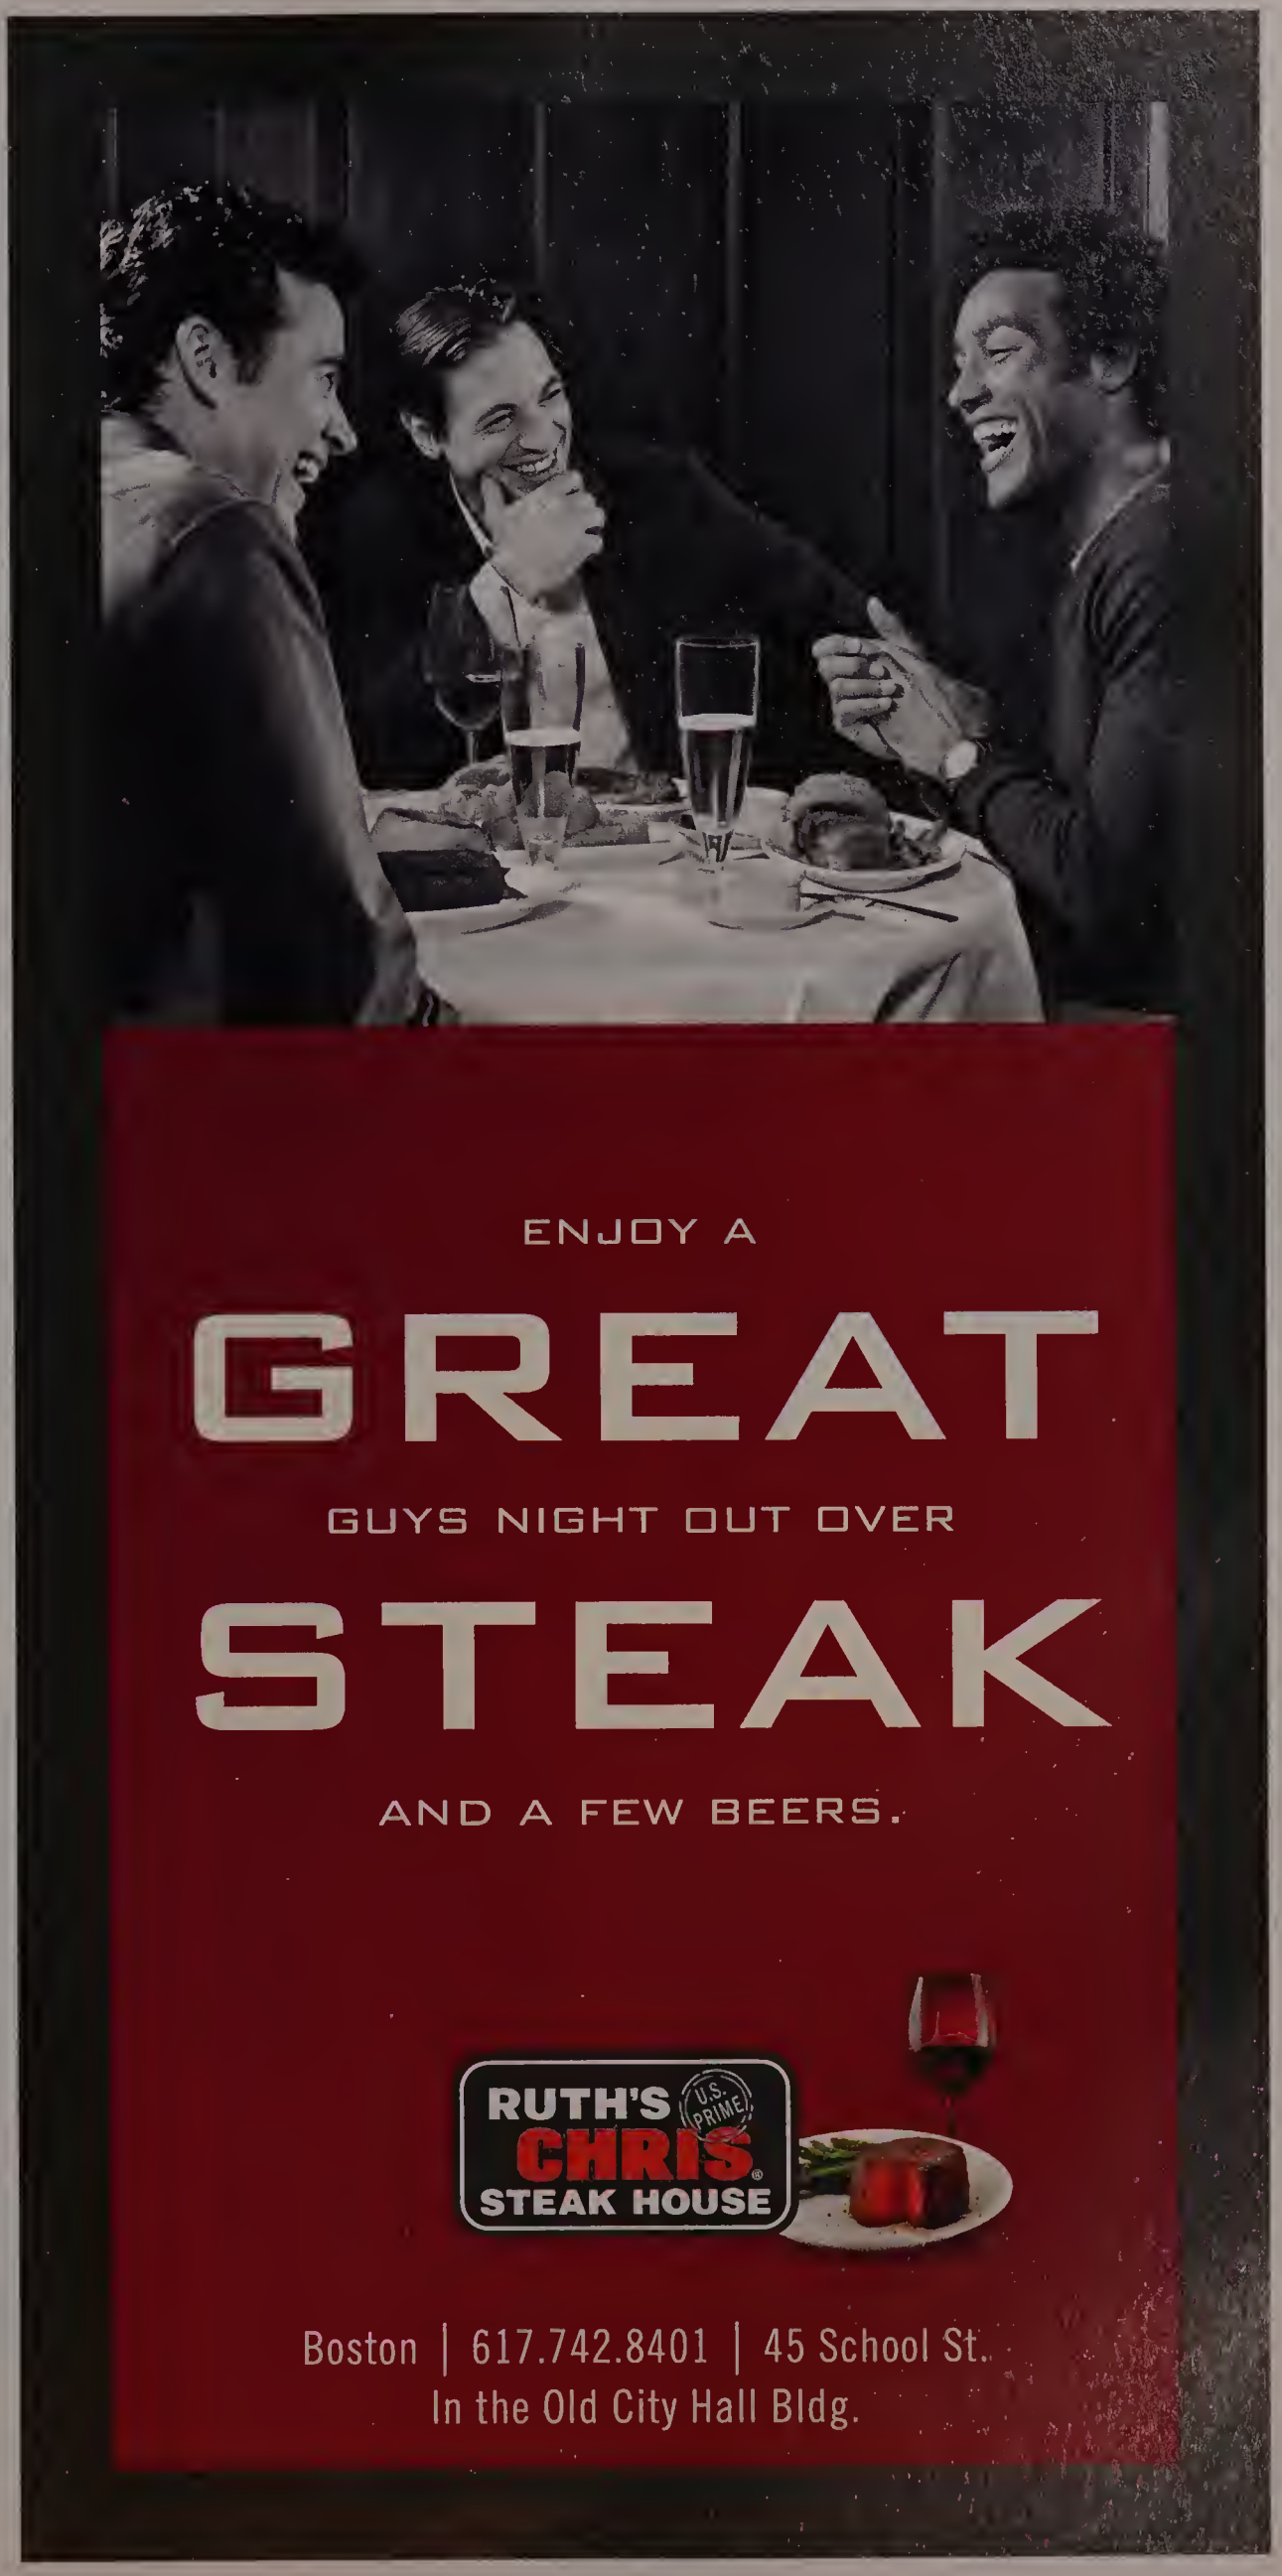
Charles' Picks

SP Kitchen mortadellina



Alto Adige soppressata

Robiola due latte

A cheese selection offered some excellent bites, particularly the robiola due latte ($6), a blend of pungent cow's and sheep's milk, and a luxurious Old Chatham NY camembert ($7). The servings—more a tease than a taste—left us room to enjoy a well-executed crème brûlée ($6), with a brittle caramel cap complementing velvety custard.

The Salty Pig's efforts in selecting and sourcing its charcuterie deserve long, sustained applause, and this care and consideration is also evident in the formidable array of craft beers, which pair wonderfully with an after-work bite. But these are all items where the quality is largely out of the restaurant's control. In comparison, service was sometimes uninformed, often disorganized and consistently inconsistent. Some of the portions could deliver more value, and some of the combinations didn't succeed. These are all issues decidedly under the Pig's jurisdiction. Once the restaurant ups its level of dependability, it could be in for a very long stay. ×××

PARENT TRAP

When is it age-appropriate to have kids?

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

THE OTHER DAY I WAS perusing Facebook's news feed (or News Line, or Face Ticker, or whatever they'll have arbitrarily renamed it by the time you read this) when I noticed an interesting post from my eighth-grade girlfriend. We went to different high schools, so I'd lost track of her until we reconnected online. Apparently she's been busy since our days of roller-skating to Vanilla Ice. "Today I signed the paperwork for my baby to go into the Marines," she wrote. The Marines? I'm no math expert, but unless "the Marines" is a really hardcore preschool, that would indicate that she has an 18-year-old. Which means that she must've had a baby, oh, right after we broke up. I'm confident that I'm out of the picture, paternity-wise, because at the time we were dating my interest in girls was secondary to my other passions, which included Larry Bird and growing my mullet.

I'm not sure when the right time is to have a kid, but I think my eighth-grade ex started a little too early. Ditto for my parents. When I was a boy, I wrote my dad a birthday card that read "Happy 28th birthday." Because I was old enough to do that when he was 28. I'd give the old man credit for getting started early, but he's not actually an old man. He's 56.

I'm glad society decided that it's now normal to have kids in your 30s, because I definitely wasn't ready in my 20s. I'm probably not ready now, either, to tell the truth. Which is problematic, since we did in fact have a kid about a year and a half ago. I'm still waiting for the wave of gravitas and maturity to wash over me, but when that little guy walks over and looks up at me with that face that's 50 percent my own, I think, "Wow, you're the perfect height for me to fart on your head." But you know what? I don't do it. Maybe parenthood actually has made me more mature.

Another reason people wait to have kids is that they're expensive. But I recently met a guy who managed to have a daughter and a subsequent grandkid without breaking the bank. He used a little-discussed parenting strategy called "having a secret love child." He told me, "When people asked if I had any kids, I'd always say, 'Not that I know about, ha ha.' Well, guess what? I had one that I didn't know about." It turns out that this fellow had a one-night stand back in college that led to a pregnancy and an adoption. His daughter eventually tracked him down, and now they get together on the holidays. It sounds like everyone is pleased with the situation, but I guess it's kind of hard to plan on that approach. For starters, you'd need to have a one-night stand in college, which rules me out. "You can't have a love child with your clothes on," as I like to say.

I try not to rely on the TV too much, but sometimes you need the kid to sit there long enough for you to pour a Scotch.

I'll admit that I'm still getting the hang of being responsible for a human being. And, as I write this, I'm being put to the test, because Heather's at a bachelorette party in Key West while I watch the boy. It's not that hard, really, to—HEY! PUT THAT DOWN. THAT'S POISON. And anyway, I've learned how to get work done while keeping an eye on the—GET DOWN FROM THERE. YOU ARE NOT THE ASIAN ACROBAT FROM OCEAN'S ELEVEN. I'm sorry. But, like I was saying, I've got a handle on this. For one thing, I've got my hot Swedish au pair, otherwise known as the TV.

Look, I try not to rely on the TV too much, but sometimes you need the kid to sit there and not hassle you long enough for you to pour a Scotch. So you turn on some gratingly annoying children's program. You don't care how repetitive or mindless the show is, as long as the kid gets into it. If David Koresh from the Branch Davidians had hosted a TV show that would shut your kid up for a half hour, you'd let him watch it. You'd say, "Ah, sure, they're singing about how you need to sacrifice goats and marry your sister, but it's no more harmful than the Wiggles."

So here are your options: Have a kid early, like my parents, and get it out of the way. Or you can wait as long as possible, in the hopes that you'll eventually have an epiphany of readiness. Of course, there's one other branch on this decision tree. I have a friend in Rhode Island who has a beautiful set of three-year-old twins. They're twin 250-horsepower Mercury Verado outboards on his 32-foot boat, which he can afford because he doesn't have any kids. That he knows about. ×××

SMART WOMEN

Wisdom from the stronger sex

SIGMUND FREUD FAMOUSLY asked, "What do women want?" The answer is so variable that I'm always surprised.

I started writing a book years ago about what I've learned from women, looking for answers that might help in the battle of the sexes. I usually turn to street-smart ladies, since I was raised for the first five years of my life by three women.

I lived in my maternal grandparents' house and was nurtured by my grandmother, a highly protective, old-fashioned immigrant from Mitteleuropa. My mother was raised as a princess, with lessons in elocution, piano, voice and manners, which were geared to erase all immigrant trappings. She largely left me in the hands of my grandmother and, really, to Katie, my grandparents' cook and housekeeper. Katie came to Boston from a tiny village on the sea in Connemara, a wild, beautiful, poor patch of Ireland on the northwest coast. Every Sunday she went to mass at St. Ignatius' church at Boston College. She was the best cook in Boston, making everything from soda bread to corned beef and cabbage to German and Eastern European specialties—chopped liver, potato latkes, stuffed veal. If she were alive today, she'd be Barbara Lynch. She used to tell me, "God is great, and Jack is fishing," which was translated from the Gaelic and meant to her that you had to be patient in life, not greedy or pushy.

Katie bought me comic books—early Superman, Captain Marvel, Wonder Woman. "Save these," she told me. "They'll be precious some day." How many people do you know who are both great cooks and great investment advisors?

You often get the best advice from family members who are not blood relatives. My two aunts changed my life in wonderful ways, and neither of them had my blood, making them more reliable. Aunt Marcia taught me to beware anyone who promised me anything wonderful. "Never spend it until it's in your pocket," she told me. Great advice, particularly in relation to Hollywood people and publishers. She gave me an early appreciation of writers, artists and all things creative. "Visit Giverny (Monet's house and gardens) if you want to be enveloped in art."

Take their advice.

She was in love with Ezio Pinza, the male star in the original South Pacific. "When he sang 'Some Enchanted Evening,'" she recounted, "I wanted to run away with him. But I want to warn you about the line, 'You will find your true love.'"

"I'm too young to hear about love," I said. "It's embarrassing."

"If you're lucky, you'll be in love many times," she said. "Marriage is an unnatural act in many ways. Whenever you do fall in love, always keep a little safe harbor for yourself, a private, secret, little harbor." She was right.

Later, in college, I was lucky to meet the woman I would call the Countess. She was the mother of two friends of mine. When I visited them in Manhattan, I soaked up her stories of lost ages like a sponge. The Countess had grown up in Philadelphia and was a child prodigy on the violin, playing concerts all over Europe. She stopped playing seriously after World War I, when Poland was destroyed by the Germans. "My parents were Polish and I think my inherent seriousness about helping others came from their efforts on behalf of the homeland. I was brought up in a patriotic tradition that assured you help people less fortunate. It was love of people that made me become an actress." When she was 18, Winthrop Ames, one of the biggest producers of the day, sent a limousine to take her to the Winter Garden Theatre, just off Broadway. He took her up onto the empty stage.

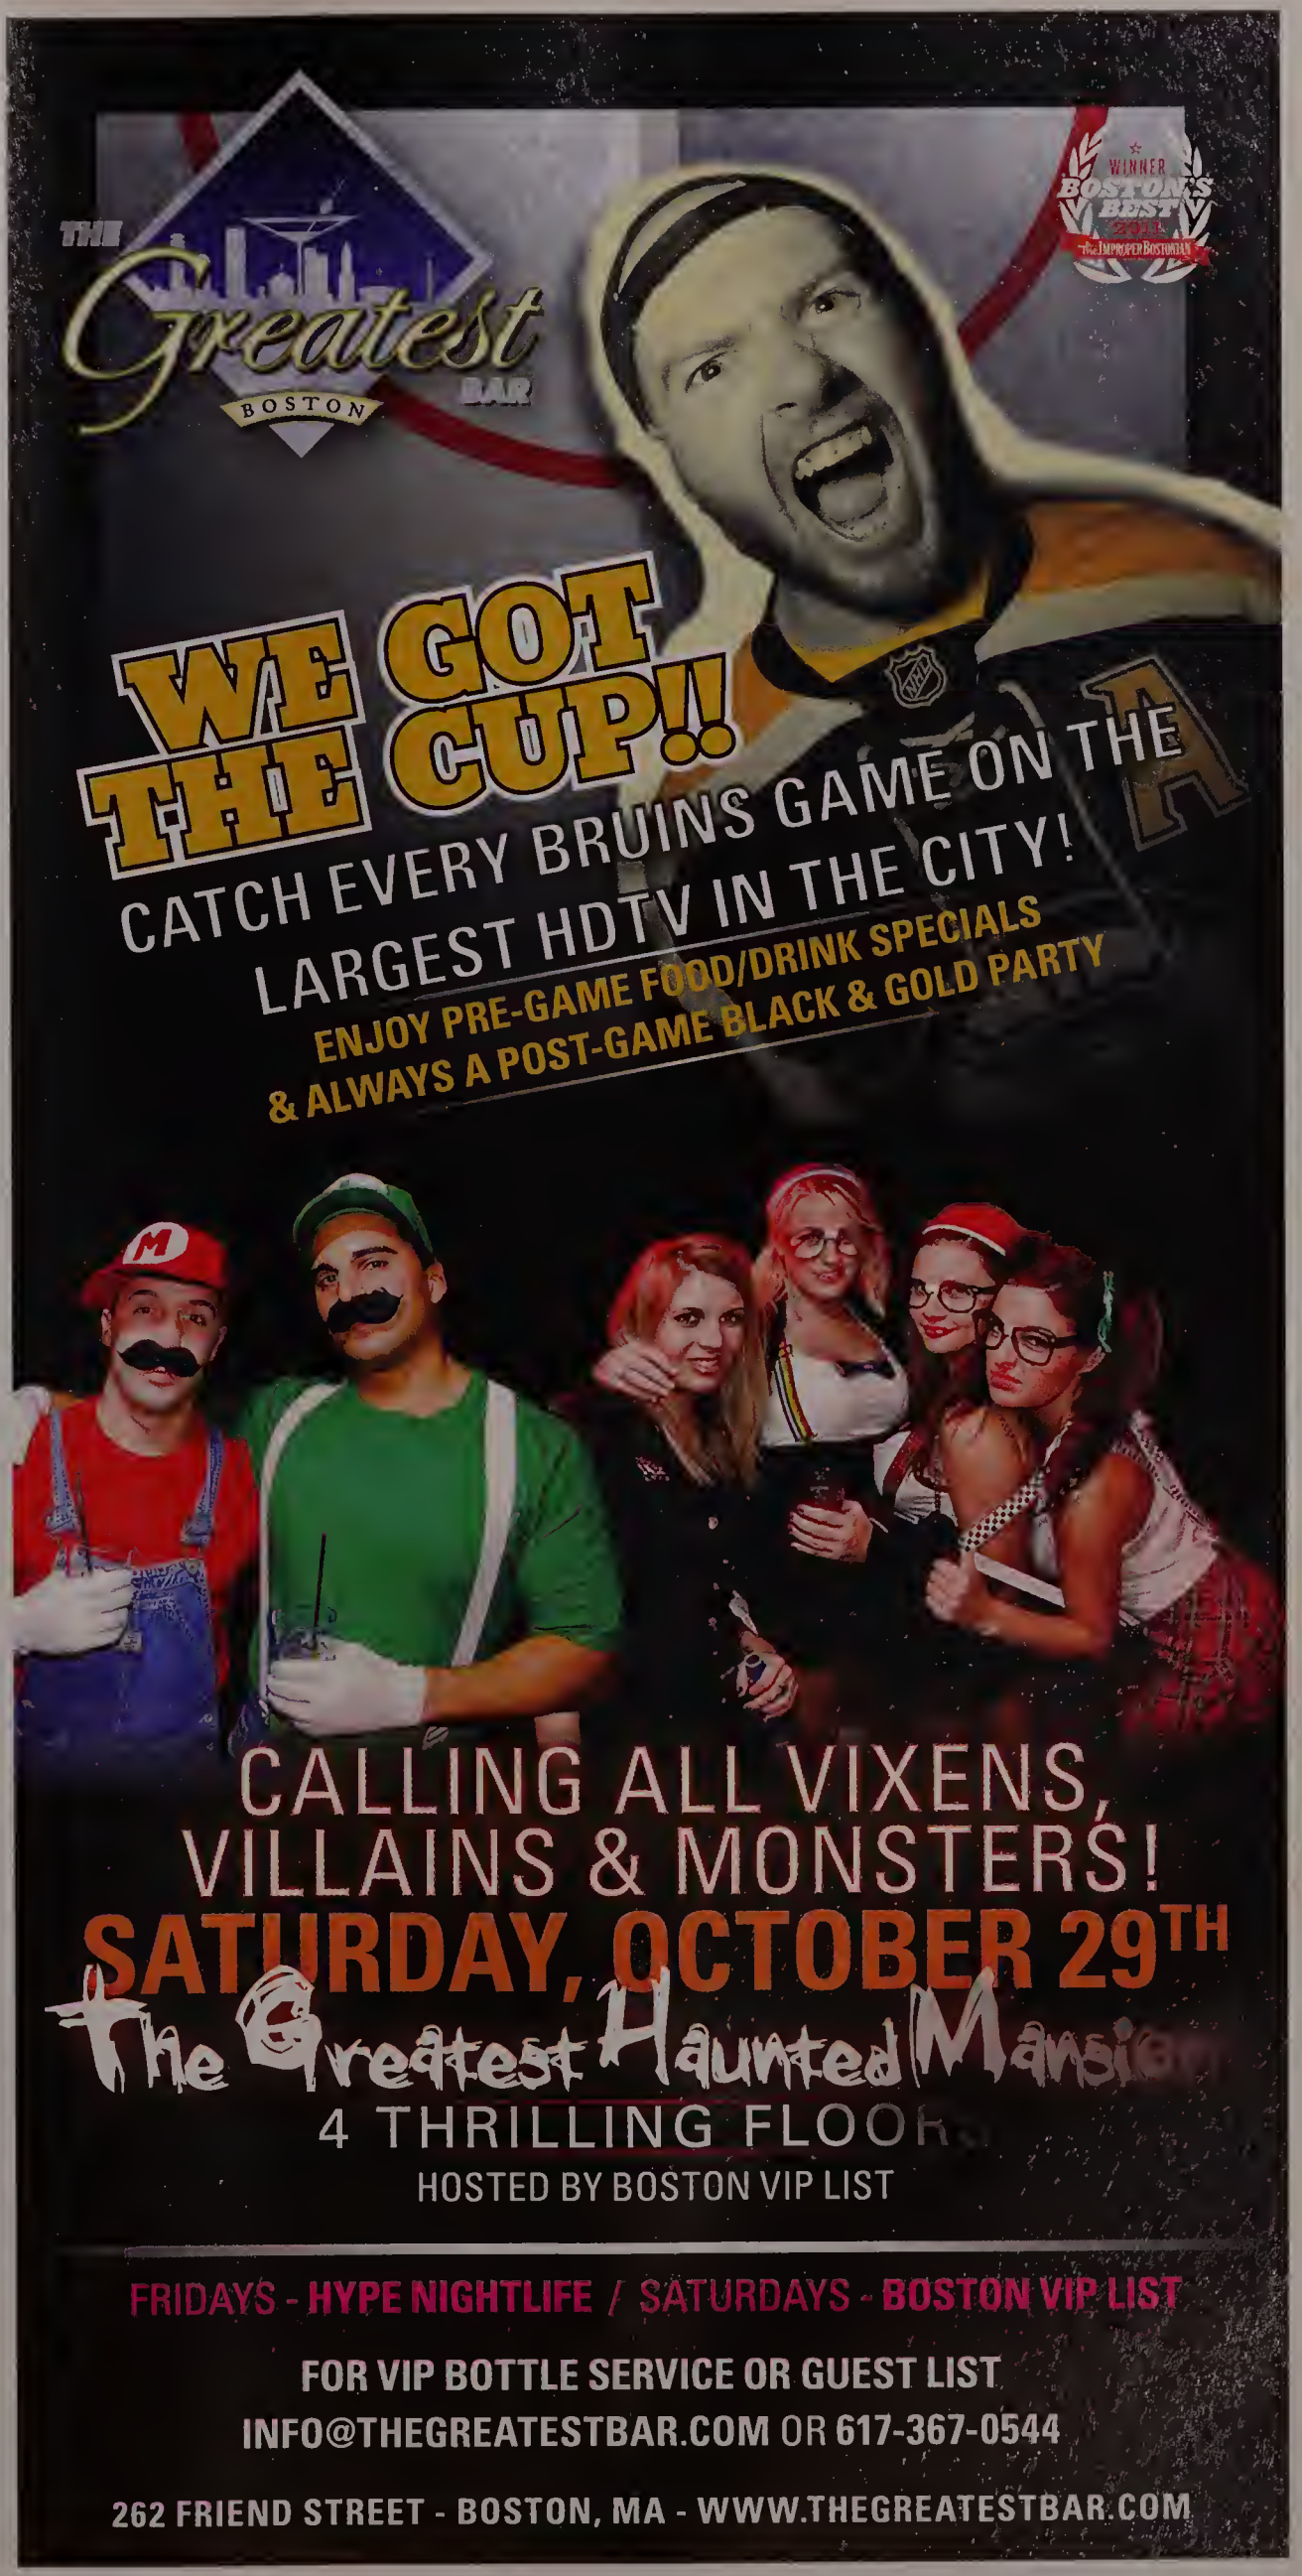
"'You've been delicately nurtured, my dear,' Ames said. 'Only tough peasant flowers can survive in the theater.'" The Countess took this as a challenge and became one of the most famous film beauties of the 1920s. She went to parties on the Lido in Venice with Elsa Maxwell and was a guest at Gerald and Sara Murphy's in Cap Ferrat when F. Scott Fitzgerald threatened to leap naked off the hills into the sea. She flew upside down in a biplane piloted by Harry Crosby over the Harvard-Yale boat race in New London. She sang after-hours in Paris bistros with Josephine Baker.

"I participated," she told me, "yet I was always the observer. Most of the notorious people of that time were like sweet, innocent, self-destructive children. F. Scott Fitzgerald would pinch me and see if anyone was looking. I think that because my parents took me to a destroyed Poland each year while I was a little girl, I grew up knowing that one had to give life a purpose, that the most important pursuit in life was in preserving an innate seriousness that said, 'Give of yourself.'"



Over the years, her themes remained the same: optimism about the human condition and the belief that the self can overcome obstacles.

"I had a feeling years ago," she confided, "that Ernest Hemingway was a desperate man and would destroy himself. So much talent I've seen in this century turned to alcohol and eventual suicide. Dorothy Parker, I remember, tried to kill herself unsuccessfully. Bob Benchley, the humorist, wrote her a note saying, 'Stop it. You'll ruin your health.'"

Eugene O'Neill worked with her in Provincetown in 1923. "He brought fresh eggs to the theater to make me omelets after the performance. 'Fresh eggs for the throat and the physique,' he'd say. He never shared my omelet, though. He always drank whiskey instead. I'd eat the omelet and listen to him talk until it was time to go home. Luckily, I've always known when it was time to go home."

When the Countess' husband was killed during World War II, she became the first head of UNICEF at the United Nations. "After everything that happened in the war, I felt that saving children was the key to the future." Her granddaughter is Téa Leoni, who Jack Nicholson claimed deserved an Academy Award for her role in Spanglish. Like her grandmother, Téa is humble about being good to people. She told me, "My grandmother said, after a long run of complaints came barreling from my 17-year-old mouth, 'Téa, things aren't what they used to be, and they never were.' That hit me hard, and I've fallen back on it over and over since then."

If you think you're a smart man, pay attention to what smart women tell you. If nothing else, it can increase your chances with them. ✖✖✖

The School of Sports {RICH LEVINE}

ON THE LOCKOUT AND EVEN MORE SOX RUMORS

FLASHDANCE The B's will come back down to Earth.

5 THOUGHTS ON THE FALL

Fenway Sports Poop Between running their manager out of town, bailing on their GM and butchering every PR opportunity imaginable, it's been quite a busy off-season for Red Sox ownership—and it's only going to get worse. Think you're angry now? Just wait until they name Linda Pizzuti the team's new director of scouting.

Speaking of PR Disasters It's not a matter of "when" but "if" the players and owners can save the NBA season. And with every passing day that "if" grows at the rate of Big Baby's waistline. Some fans have suggested that the players start their own league, and honestly, that's not a bad idea. Anyone checked with Fenway Sports Group? Maybe they can sponsor a team with LeBron.

Pay Up Wes Welker's on pace to break the NFL record for receptions and receiving yards in a season. On a related note, he's also on pace to set a new mark for number of times scraped off the field with a spatula. At this point, the Pats need to either give him a break or offer him an extension.

Easy on the B's The Bruins got off to a slow start, and everyone brought down the hammer: "They're not focused! They're not committed! They partied too much with the Cup!" The truth is that the Bruins were never a great team—just a good team that got hot at the right time—and they're not a great team now. They'll have letdowns. But they're obviously good enough to get back to the playoffs, and at that point... ANYTHING'S POSSIBLE! (Sorry, wrong sport. I miss basketball already.)

1.21 Gigawatts! Have you noticed how close we are to fulfilling Back to the Future II's 2015 World Series prediction of the Chicago Cubs over the Miami Gators? First, with Theo in Chi-town, the Cubs will be contenders. Second, on Nov. 11, the Florida Marlins will officially become the Miami Marlins. Now, all we need is for Miami to move to the AL, change their name to the Gators and watch as our minds are collectively blown.

2 BIG ACQUISITIONS

Looking for Al The Pats made two huge signings in the off-season, and none bigger than Albert Haynesworth. Has he been worth it? Probably not. I mean, the guy's barely seen the field. But as the season wears on, Big Al will be there to solidify the run defense (allowing the Pats to move Vince "INT" Wilfork to his more natural position in the secondary).

No' Mo' Ocho I'm not sure what to say about Ochocinco at this point. On the one hand, he's awful. On the other hand, at least he's behaving, right? At least he's a good teammate? All I know is that if this is Ocho's version of heaven, he might want to try hell.

Four More (Unsubstantiated) Reasons for the Sox Collapse

Unsubstantiated Reason No. 467 The team requested more day games, but John Henry refused, saying: "That's when we vampires sleep.""

Unsubstantiated Reason No. 468 The daily cribbage game, once a pillar of clubhouse unity, lost its appeal after Matt Albers insisted on playing in the nude.

Unsubstantiated Reason No. 469 Carmine (Epstein's trusted baseball computer program) became sentient and orchestrated a front office divide between itself and the so-called "flesh faces."

Unsubstantiated Reason No. 470 Adrian Gonzalez was blackballed in mid-September after it was discovered that the goatee trimmings he was leaving in the clubhouse sink weren't actually from his goatee.

ONE BREAKING STORY: Listen, I don't want to get too specific (out of "concern for my job"), but anonymous sources tell me that a recent hatchet job on Terry Francona by a certain newspaper (courtesy of a certain local ownership group) was way below the belt. Next time, do us all a favor and just throw yourselves under a bus.

3 DATES TO WATCH

10/23: John Lackey turns 33 and parties the same way he does each day: 1. Wake up. 2. Take down a mini-keg of Bud Heavy. 3. Pick fights with strangers in a mall parking lot.

10/27: The Bruins and Canadiens face off for the first time this season. Royal Canadian Mounted Police will be stationed nearby, in case the Habs need someone to fight their battles.

10/30: The Pats spend Halloween in Pittsburgh, where Ben Roethlisberger wonders if it's too soon to go out dressed as a bathroom attendant.

Soroff On KENNY WORMALD

The new Footloose star tells us about dancers' feet, L.A. girls and tripping in front of Madonna.

DANCER/ACTOR KENNY WORMALD, 27, stars in this month's remake of the classic 1984 film Footloose, reprising the role that Kevin Bacon made famous. Wormald was born and raised in Stoughton and began dancing at the age of six. He trained in many genres and, at 10, was selected to perform for President Clinton at the White House. In 2002, he won the gold medal at the World Dance Championships and was one of six featured on the MTV reality show Dancelife. He's performed in music videos for Madonna, Christina Aguilera, Chris Brown, Nelly Furtado, Kylie Minogue, Mariah Carey and Prince, and has toured with such artists as Justin Timberlake and the Pussycat Dolls. Wormald lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: If there's music, can you stop yourself from dancing?
Kenny Wormald: I actually really can't. It's kind of a problem. I'll be in a grocery store and a song will come on, like a Justin Timberlake song that I like, and I really can't help it.

Must've been a problem in school.
It was. I used to get yelled at in Spanish class for tapping my feet. My nickname was "Worm," and the teacher would just yell, "Gusano!"

Are you the ultimate wedding date?
Absolutely. I'd be by far the best wedding date money could buy.

If your life was a musical, what would it be?
A mix between Chicago and Showgirls.

When you toured with Justin Timberlake, did you ever spark up a joint with him?
[Laughs.] I didn't get the pleasure. I think he was more into it on the first tour, not the one I was on.

Madonna: a deity or past her sell-by date?
She's awesome. I really dug her. I was so young, and that was one of my first jobs. The video was supposed to depict war through a fashion show. I was playing a young soldier, and I had to pull a knife out of the runway, and Madonna was sitting at the end of the stage. I walk up to pick the knife up and I fell, because it was jammed so deeply into the stage. I literally fell right in front of Madonna. I didn't know if I was going to get fired or what, but she laughed, and she was so nice to me the rest of the time. She's wicked cool. She's tiny, and she's totally in control.

So how many degrees of Kevin Bacon are you?
I guess either one or zero.

Pop star who's the best dancer?
When I worked with Justin, it was him, but I'd say now it's Chris Brown. Just dance-wise.

Ever done the macarena?
It was popular when I was in junior high school, and it would come on, and you'd just get stuck doing it. That was the song for the girls or guys who couldn't dance. It got everyone going.

Have you ever done the lambada?
I don't even know what that is.

A 1980s dance craze.
Whoa. Sounds interesting.

Favorite ethnic dance?
I'm a huge fan of krumping. Have you seen the documentary Rize by David LaChapelle? They compare krumping to some of the African tribal dances that are thousands of years old.

Fred Astaire or Gene Kelly?
I feel like I'm a mix between them both. Can we combine them? Fred Kelly?

Are you the real Lord of the Dance?
You know what? Yeah, I am. Michael Flatley is ill. He absolutely killed it. But there's a new generation, and out of the young dancers today, I'm up there.

Are you a big ballet fan?
I grew up taking it. I did ballet solos. It's so important for your training as a dancer. It helps your footwork and your balance. But I don't go to the ballet. It's vital. It's important. I love and respect it, but I'm not really around it anymore.

Do you go out dancing at clubs a lot?
I do go out. Not a lot. Hollywood clubs kind of suck. Everyone's just standing around and doing the two-step. But if it's a cool club, and there's room for it, and the vibe's inviting, then yeah, I'll dance. But I don't go to clubs to dance.

Are your feet in pretty rough shape?
Y'know, dancers' feet are usually pretty gross, like Black Swan style. But I wear sneakers or shoes when I dance now; I don't ever dance barefoot anymore. So my feet are cool.

Most comfortable shoes?
In life, Nikes. They have shoes that are like Vans that I wear around. But when I dance, I like Jordans, or basketball sneakers.

What's the best party trick you can do?
My buddy and I do this. Either girls out here in L.A. are dumb, or they've never seen Good Will Hunting, but you know the scene where he says, "I have 12 brothers"? We do that, and the girl goes "Nah!" And I say, "Marky, Ricky, Danny, Terry, Mikey, Davey, Timmy, Tommy, Joey, Robby, Johnny and Brian." I do that one a lot, and girls always fall for it.

What can you do with your feet that I can't?
It's called the Kenny move. It's an optical illusion, if you will. I definitely made it up, and I've seen other people use it. Jay-Z actually used it on his Madison Square Garden DVD.

Is dancing the best way to seduce somebody?
Yeah. I don't think guys should set out to do that, but it works, for sure. But girls with guys? Absolutely.

Can anyone who dances badly be good in bed?
If you can't find the rhythm, you're going to be a little off.

What do you have to say to all those kids who teased you when you were a kid for dancing?
On Twitter, a guy I went to high school with wrote, "Holy shit! We used to make fun of that guy for tap-dancing! I feel stupid now." I was like, "Ah, yes." But kids'll make fun of another kid for wearing the wrong color sneakers. They're going to make fun of the kid who does ballet. I understand it. But now I'm laughing at their girlfriends driving them to the movie theaters to see me. ✖✖✖

Oh, the Places You'll Go

FOUR NEW ENGLAND DESTINATIONS, AND THE STOPS TO MAKE ALONG THE WAY

BY THE IMPROPER STAFF

Winvian MORRIS, CONNECTICUT

A UNIQUE SETTING FOR A CONNECTICUT HAVEN

JETSETTERS OFTEN approach WINVIAN with a skeptical eye, and with good reason. The 18 cottages that make up the 113-acre resort are each decorated according to a unique—and occasionally goofy—theme, ranging from a repurposed helicopter to a tree house that actually sways. It all could've gone horribly wrong, but a close look reassures that this is a resort with the highest of standards, and one that comfortably embraces its kitschiness. It's a short two-and-a-half-hour drive from Boston, but this quirky plot in Connecticut's rolling Litchfield Hills feels like a faraway land.

Time your departure so you're passing B.T.'S SMOKEHOUSE in Sturbridge, Mass., right around lunch. To most urbanites, the town is little more than a colonial village for elementary school field trips, but at this well-sauced landmark, chef/owner Brian Treitman is interested in a different kind of history. Traditional Southern barbecue is still a mystery to most New Englanders, but a plate of his succulent brisket is divine enlightenment.

Since a Winvian vacation isn't retail-focused, memento seekers should plan to shop before arriving at the resort. A short detour to the COFFEE TRADE in Avon, Conn., is an opportunity to fuel your caffeine buzz and browse a selection of brew accessories. You'll also find Harney & Sons teas and antique cups and saucers.

CHAIR SALON
WINVIAN MIXES HIGH-END LUXURY WITH A HEAVY DOSE OF WHIMSY.

THE BEAVER LODGE IS ONE OF THE UNIQUE COTTAGES.

Once you pass through Winvian's understated whitewashed gates, a kids' summer camp in Prada hiking boots awaits. The main house dates back to the 1770s, eventually becoming the swanky country home of Merrill Lynch founding partner Winthrop Smith and his wife, Vivian, in the '50s. They mashed their names together to title their home (because that's what rich people in Connecticut do) and the moniker stuck.

Today, the main house acts as a central hub with common areas and a large dining room overlooking the vegetable and herb garden that supplies chef Chris Eddy's larder. Trained under the likes of Daniel Boulud and Alain Ducasse, Eddy serves an ever-changing menu that combines simple ingredients in impressive, but casual, ways. The dining room is a large space that can feel lonely as the resort only hosts some 50 overnight guests (many of whom take their dinner in-cottage), but the traditional decor and casual ambience confer warmth, even if you're dining solo.

Outside, the cottages are spread far enough apart that guests are likely to make good use of the bicycles parked by their front doors, though they're also connected by foot trails that play to the idyllic landscape. Fifteen internationally renowned architects created the cabins that circle Beaver and Charles ponds, and each comes with a full wet bar and state-of-the-art entertainment system. The most impressive cottages, like John Carino's outdoorsy "Beaver Lodge" (which boasts an elaborate dam above the bed and trees sprouting from the bathroom floor) and Kate Stevens' triple-story-lofted "Stable," have garnered a following from repeat visitors that request them time and time again.

All-inclusive packages give guests carte blanche access to outdoor activities like kayaking and mountain biking, but Winvian's menu of more elaborate diversions is too enticing to miss. Offering everything from hot-air balloon rides to glassblowing classes, the resort is serious about its role as an entertainment center in the otherwise sleepy, bucolic hills.

The end of an active day at even the best summer camp leaves adventurers sore and scratching mosquito bites, but here, exertion

Culinary Trail PORTLAND, MAINE

NEW TASTES TO THE NORTH.

SPICE OF LIFE
DINING IN PORTLAND, MAINE, ISN'T JUST ABOUT FORE STREET ANYMORE. THERE'S A REFRESHING, INDEPENDENT CULINARY SCENE.

FOR A TIME, adventurous eating in Portland meant a tussle in an Old Port saloon followed by a getaway to the docks, where at J's Oyster the row of clam steamers in the back gives the restaurant the look of a seaside laundromat. For foodies, the most common question received upon returning to Boston was "Whatdya order at Fore Street?"

Things are changing up north. New chefs are gaining attention; a fresh range of flavor is being set, and while popular fashions have their influence, the scene is refreshingly independent.

To whet the appetite, wade into the brackish cultural waters between Boston and the Forest City, as one of our best chefs (Ken Oringer) showcases the hottest trend (farm-to-table) at EARTH, inside the (aptly named) resort Hidden Pond.

Deep in the woods of Kennebunkport, the restaurant is a paean to local sourcing. Marvel at the illuminated native apple tree hanging upside down from the ceiling, but watch the footing of your yuzu sake martini on the cracked and knotted surface of your log table. Snack on smoked duck drummettes; spin forkfuls of spicy lobster bigoli. But do it soon, as the restaurant shutters for the winter.

For a local taste moving away from the status quo, drop by the SEBAGO BREWING COMPANY brewery in Gorham. Currently unavailable in our home state, Sebago crafts beers that forgo the English-style yeasts found in Geary's, Shipyard or the other Maine producers you may be familiar with. Take a tour, have a taste of the hoppy, West Coast–style creations, and maybe see employees huddled like Macbeth's witches around a steaming cauldron of experimental brew.

PEOPLE OF EARTH
THE RUSTIC BAR SCENE

For rest, the PORTLAND HARBOR HOTEL offers soft beds, downy robes and a chocolate lobster on your pillow. Better for your recuperation, the lobby bar offers $5 martinis during happy hour, which can be enjoyed on the spacious terrace.

The location is also ideal for further culinary thrill-seeking. Right next door, Miyake's version of farm-to-table cooking includes local pigs nourished by sushi-grade tuna scraps. But now is the time to move away from the Old Port—where the trends have sprouted a 5 Guys franchise next to a cupcake shop—and up to Congress Street,

Ocean House WATCH HILL, RHODE ISLAND

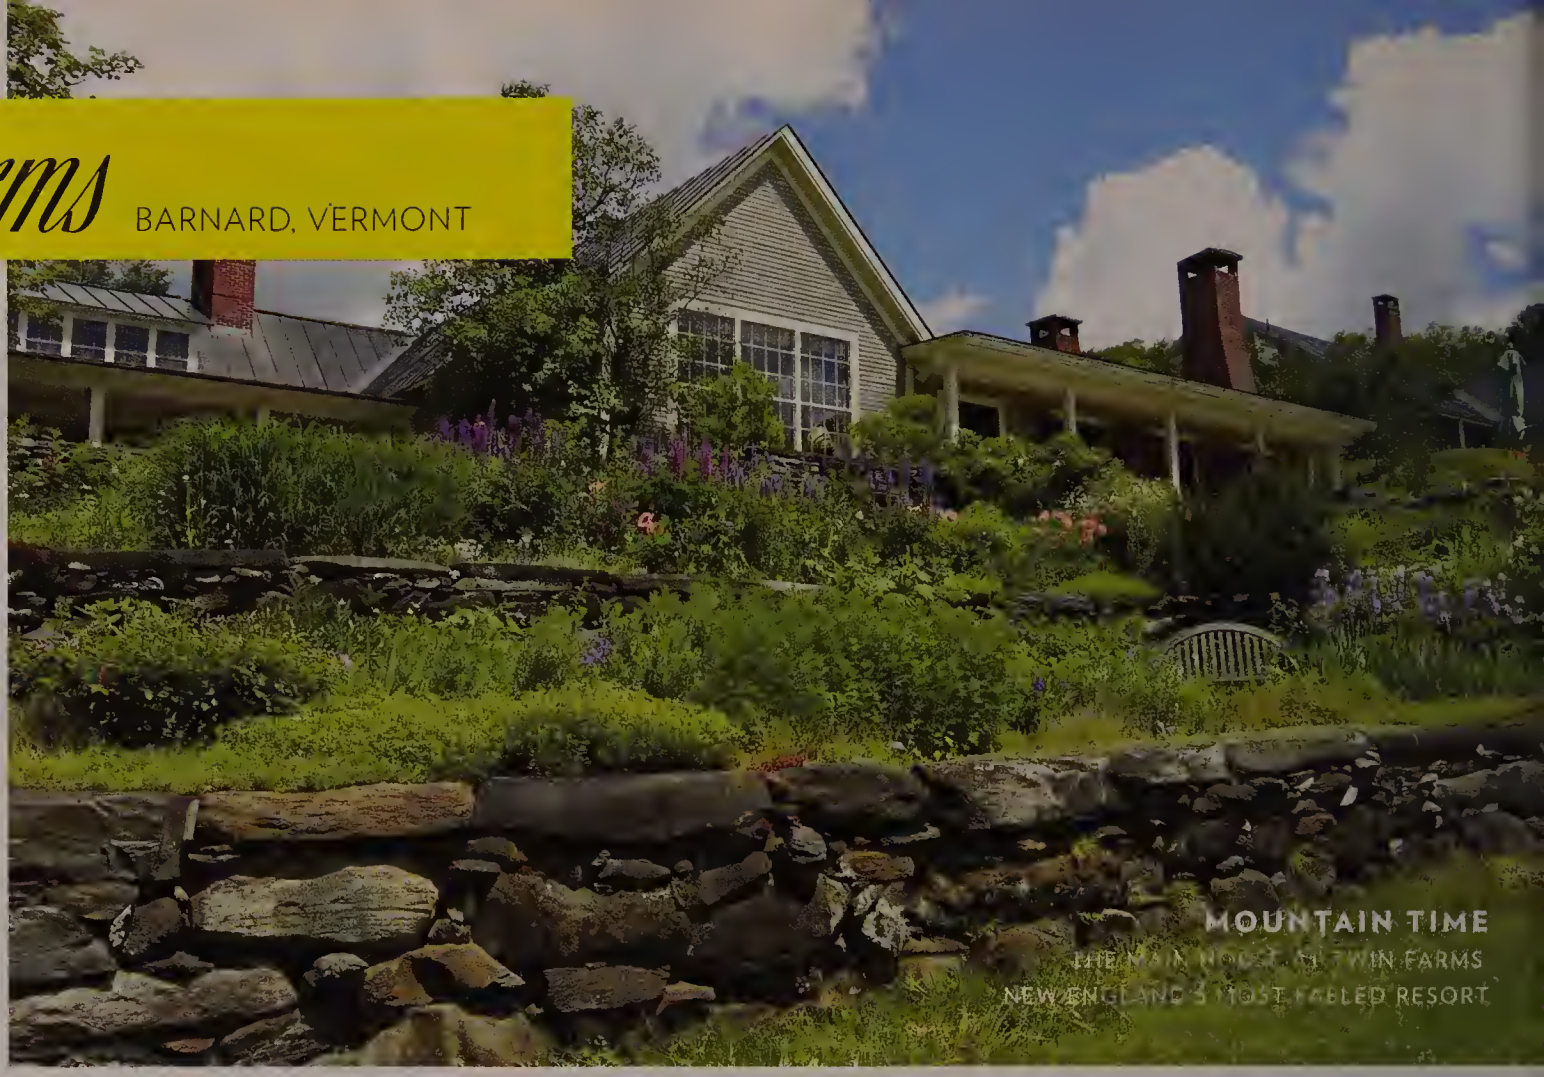
A RESPLENDENT 1868 ESTATE BY THE SEA

THE LEAD-UP to a long winter can leave weary Bostonians wanting to be anywhere but here. Break away from the urban grind and imminent seasonal gloom by heading south. But not too far. Rhode Island makes for a getaway that feels miles—sometimes eras—away.

Start by finding creative renewal on the slopes of Providence's College Hill neighborhood. Avoid the lines and arrive at the RHODE ISLAND SCHOOL OF DESIGN MUSEUM OF ART when it opens at 10 am. Frogger fans might enjoy waiting until later in the day, though, as dodging too-cool hipsters and starving artists is a fun way to pass an afternoon. Or schedule your visit for the last Saturday of every month to get free entry. (You can funnel the $10 admission into your skinny-jeans fund.)

External hazards aside, the museum houses a world-class art collection. Until January, Made in the U.K.: Contemporary Art From the Richard Brown Baker Collection brings London calling in works by British artists like Damien Hirst, Mat Collishaw, Angus Fairhurst and Jake and Dinos Chapman. Bridget Riley's 1981 painting "Gather" perks up white gallery walls and glum winter blues with its bright op-art stripes.

Intellectual cravings quenched, head to '50s-style diner CINDY'S in North Scituate for scrumptious brunch fare. Quaint surroundings are eclipsed by ample servings of eggs, hash and home fries. Originally called the Bo-Peek diner, it's a greasy spoon of the red barstool variety, complete with checkerboard floors and a bright neon sign.



ROOMS WITH A VIEW OCEAN HOUSE JUST UNDERWENT A $140-MILLION RECONSTRUCTION. AND IT SHOWS.

Nothing could make a greater contrast to the unspoiled glory of OCEAN HOUSE, located in Watch Hill, R.I. Just opened in June 2010, the 1868 estate underwent a $140-million reconstruction. Features like the yellow-painted exterior ("It took only six or seven attempts to get the right shade," laughs communications director Dinah Saglio) and the stone fireplace (reconstructed rock-by-rock) are identical to those of the original building. Vintage-style details like a phone booth tucked down a corridor or the resort's '30s-inspired boat, The Dandy, belie the ultra-modern amenities.

Near the 12,000-foot spa, a touch of a button unleashes a

VERMONT'S PRIVATE SHANGRI-LA

VERMONT IS A state with the good fortune to have God as its landscaper—you can't turn your head without getting an eyeful of boreal forest or some lucky twist of tectonics. It's the sort of countryside you'd expect to harbor gangs of glockenspiel players and organic cows. And it's the setting for TWIN FARMS, New England's most fabled resort.

To get there, drive up the unspooling postcard of Route 4, past the tour buses huffing on the edge of Quechee Gorge. Turn right on Waterman Hill Road to stretch your legs at SIMON PEARCE, an artisan glass and pottery workshop based in a restored wool mill on the Ottauquechee River. Long a staple of wedding registries, many a credit card has gone to die in Simon Pearce's dinnerware collections. After browsing for deals among the "seconds" (slightly flawed products that are heftily discounted), step downstairs to watch the glassblowers mold fiery goo into Champagne flutes.

MILL TO POWER SIMON PEARCE'S WORKSHOP, STORE AND RESTAURANT ARE HYDRO-POWERED BY THE OTTAUQUECHEE RIVER.

Ten minutes up the road in Woodstock, the WOODSTOCK INN & RESORT is a traveler's oasis with a world-class spa and a clubby lunch spot in Richardson's Tavern. Sitting in a winged armchair by the fire with a plate of oysters Rockefeller and a pint of local beer is an idyllic autumn pleasure. A more elaborate meal can be had at the hotel's AAA Four Diamond award-winning the Red Rooster, which, apart from the expected seared diver scallops and filet mignon, boasts a sundae and ice-cream-sandwich menu. If you have time to dally, follow dinner with a night in one of the inn's extravagantly comfortable rooms, sleeping off the calories on 600-thread-count sheets before a snapping fire.

But the main attraction lies 10 miles up Route 12. Hanging a right at Silver Lake, you'll strike a dirt road before finding (or more likely missing) a humble metal gate overshadowed by trees. Although it's only been open since 1993, Twin Farms is a byword for understated luxury. Set on 300 acres of woodland, meadows, ponds and hiking trails, the setting is Shangri-la by way of Architectural Digest. Other resorts in Vermont are beautiful. Twin Farms' cottages were designed by rock-star interior designer Jed Johnson, and it's got a private ski slope.

Once the home of Nobel Prize-winning writer Harry Sinclair Lewis and his wife, Dorothy Thompson, the resort centers on a 1795 farmhouse that's been dressed with antiques and original art. There's an emphasis on Americana and plush seating, on graciousness leavened by the warmth of a smiling host uncorking a bottle of something rare.

The suites in the main house are the most modest accommodations, but that still means hard-core toile de Jouy. More impressive are the 10 Jed Johnson cottages that roost in the woods between Beaver Pond and the helipad. They're maintained with an almost curatorial sense; each is considered a complete work of art. The "Barn," for instance, is a Scandinavian gambrel design worked in stone and cedar. The "Studio" boasts two floors of modern art and a giant, copper bathtub. Overlooking a private pond, the Farmhouse at Copper Hill has four enormous suites decorated by Thad Hayes, whose taste for rustic opulence is evidenced by stone fireplaces and timbered ceilings matched with spa-like bathrooms bigger than most Beacon Hill apartments. Breakfasting in the sunroom of the Birch suite while gazing at the rambling lines of the Green Mountains—with nary a human soul in view—is the definition of tranquility.

There are, however, activities aplenty. Crossing from the main house past a croquet lawn and over a covered footbridge to the pub, you can rack up a game of billiards over a cocktail. Or keep walking a few hundred yards to the Japanese Furo, a secluded bathhouse where guests poach themselves in chest-deep, 104-degree water. There's also fly-fishing, tennis and canoeing on site, while hikers can climb to a scenic lookout and arrive to find a sumptuous picnic basket waiting at the summit.

Twin Farms is all-inclusive, so the second bottle of Moët & Chandon "Imperial" is fair game, as is anything else you can imagine to order (there's a reason for the high staff-to-guest ratio, namely, cheese plates on demand). Before arriving, visitors fill out a questionnaire with food preferences so the kitchen can tailor meals if, say, your sensibilities curdle at veal. The cuisine, while worthy of a five-star kitchen, is lighter than might be expected, and emphasizes ingredients over gimmicks. The menu changes daily, but might include a lunch of seared tuna and chard salad eaten with a dry, French rosé. Dinner is more elaborate, consisting of five courses, not counting cocktail-hour canapés like lobster knuckles on potato chips with chives. A typical autumn menu might begin with wild matsutake mushrooms in a garlic broth, followed by herb-crusted halibut with foam made from watercress gathered on the grounds. After dessert (say, toasted graham cracker cake with blueberry compote and mint gelato), diners can take a nightcap in the pub. "All-inclusive" doesn't mean "all-hours," but bartenders serve until the last holdout's gone to bed.

is remedied by a trip to the spa. Try the decadent ultimate massage, where two masseurs spread calm into weary limbs. Decked in natural hues with wood accents and windows overlooking a meadow, it's as close as you can be to nature without the need for Citronella.

When the sun surrenders, arrange for a campfire and s'mores as a nostalgic nod before bed. There aren't many lights on the grounds, and nights can get inky black, but that adds to the fun. You needn't look farther than the stars in the sky to see just how far you've come from home.

where Portland's dining scene is evolving with restaurants unlike those we have at home.

In Longfellow Square, Masa Miyake's young offshoot, PAI MEN MIYAKE, is a modern ramen shop serving ceramic bowls of noodles cradling morsels like soy egg and pork belly. Courteous and understanding patrons chopsticking their way through an order of lobster ceviche won't even turn their heads when you tip the vessel back and drink the broth like cereal milk.

Take a stroll down Congress, stopping in the galleries or the Portland Museum of Art (or, more enlivening, the world's only cryptozoology museum) before looping back to Longfellow for dinner at BODA. For years, owners Nattasak Wongsaichua and Danai Sriprasert ran your standard pad thai eatery, but last year they closed and revamped as a restaurant specializing in "very Thai," street-food inspired dishes.

Begin with the miang kum som-oh, little bites of savory, palm-sugary pomelo fruit salad wrapped in betel leaves. An order of kanom-krok brings quail eggs on a dimpled frying pan. Entrees on offer include jasmine rice stir-fried with Maine crabmeat and Jonah crabs claws, and a street-vendor favorite, pork hocks braised with star anise.

If it all feels too foodie, or you're just bursting at the seams, Congress Street also has a lineup of dives where you can rub some dirt on your culinary conceits and skank away a few calories. Spotlighting New England rock, punk and metal bands, GENO'S presents an ideal setting for a late-night drunk. For a late-night snack, Gogi, a Korean taco spot, sits next door. True, it's a trend, but you'll be tipsy, and trends can be delicious.

screen showing life-size instructors ready to lead guests through a menu of exercise programs. In the guest rooms, iPod docking stations are planted by the flat-screen TVs that overlook deep soaking tubs.

Despite the estate's massive size, it's the kind of place where everybody knows your name. Stealthy staff members appear out of the shadows to top off the coffee you didn't know needed refilling, and Jeeves-like floor valets leave warm treats at turndown, or appear instantly with Molton Brown vanity kits to replace items forgotten at home.

In the evening, dine at Season's, the property's most elegant restaurant, which, naturally, pays homage to farm-to-table cuisine. Executive chef Eric Haugen completely revises the menu about once a week, but recent dishes included Stonington lobster, Hudson Valley foie gras or North Haverhill, N.H., suckling pig. And 80 percent of each dish is made from ingredients produced within a 150-mile radius of the kitchen.

But relaxation may be the biggest draw. Even in winter, you can read a book beside the saltwater pool and gaze on the ocean panorama. Through the floor-to-ceiling French doors, you can see Montauk and Block Island, or just wander onto one of the resort's many verandas to contemplate the winter garden.

NIGHT

NEW PLAYERS ON THE CITY'S CLUB SCENE ARE BRINGING A FRESH IDEA TO LATE-NIGHT REVELS: HOSPITALITY.

BY ALEXANDRA HALL

PHOTOGRAPHS BY NATASHA MOUSTACHE

SITTING PRETTY
CLUBS LIKE STORYVILLE CATER MORE TO COMFORT THAN ATTITUDE.

FROM THE STUART STREET SIDEWALK, BIJOU LOOKS LIKE JUST ANOTHER ANONYMOUS, THUMPING DANCE CLUB. A LINE OF HOPEFULS FORMS OUTSIDE THE GIGANTIC FRONT DOOR AND SNAKES PAST THE ABUTTING PORN SHOP. IT'S A SHIFTING FLURRY OF JIMMY CHOOS, SPORT COATS, LIP GLOSS, SEQUINS AND ANTICIPATION. BUSINESSMEN IN ROLLED SLEEVES TEXT THEIR WHEREABOUTS TO BUDDIES; GRAD STUDENTS JOSTLE; GIRLS IN THIS-SEASON GUCCI GLANCE IMPATIENTLY AT THE ENTRANCE. AHEAD OF THEM, THE EVENING BECKONS. AND EVERYONE'S ANGLING TO GET INSIDE TO SEE JUST WHAT IT'LL DELIVER.

But once past the metallic purple walls of Bijou's staircase, many of the dance club clichés are nowhere to be found. There's no techno blaring so loud you can't hear your own thoughts; instead, the music has been carefully controlled and customized in each "seating pod" (via an embedded sound system) according to the tastes of its occupants. There's no mess of bodies at the coat check, and no piles of handbags or jackets—they're hidden in the storage compartments built into the back of each seat. People are sitting, speaking without yelling and downing sliders and cocktails before stepping upstairs to dance. The place seems downright civilized. In the ladies' room, a silk-clad redhead leans into the mirror to refasten a curl and cavils about her earlier wait at the door. "It was pretty worth it, though," she says. "This is probably the first really non-Boston club I've ever seen."

THAT SHOULDN'T BE A COMPLIMENT, but it is. For decades, Bostonians' complaints about local nightlife have been a familiar litany: Dance floors take over seating areas; noisy electronica precludes any form of conversation; if you're not there solely to dance, you might as well go home. Epic lines at the door hardly budge, nor does the line at the coat check, and ferocious cover charges commit you to staying in one place for the entire evening. The food is mediocre at best (and often isn't available after 11 pm), and the bouncers and waitstaff are either rude or harried. You're more likely to get treated like a stockyard commodity than a VIP. The only people willing to put up with this sort of treatment are early 20-somethings who come to monopolize the dance floor and hook up, which leads to another complaint: The clientele isn't varied, sophisticated or particularly interesting.

But over the past few months, a spate of new spots has tried to address those complaints. From clever details (the aforementioned handbag storage, craft-cocktail programs, ambitious dining menus) to bigger gestures (special services for regulars, design layouts that separate the dancers from the dining area), new clubs like the just-opened Bijou, Descent at the W Hotel (due to open any day now) and Storyville (the month-old reincarnation of Saint in the Back Bay) are delivering ways to make clubs around town more innovative, more comfortable and more grown-up.

If they're successful, the effect could alter the public's perceptions and expectations of what it means to have a night on the town. For the demographic that previously eschewed dance floors in favor of restaurants and bars, clubs could now become regular destinations.

RICARDO RODRIGUEZ CAN BARELY remember the last time he went to a dance club—and not just because his 20s are shrouded in hazy memories. A realtor and fitness buff, he and his friends are more often found dancing on tables at Toro, or near the bar at Stella. At both of those bar/restaurants, as he describes it, "You go to drink and eat, dance and stay as late as you would at a club, without having to be with sweaty teenagers and listen to horrible, unrecognizable techno."

Rodriguez is a 40-year-old poster boy for the expansion of nightlife's target audience. "We're not the kind of 30- and 40-year-olds that our parents were," he says. "Many of us still go out a lot, and frankly, we should be courted. We spend a lot of money, and we expect quality and good service in return."

Meanwhile, younger partyers are demanding more out of their evenings out, too. Alex Valls, a 22-year-old Miami native who blogs about nightlife (miami nicepopup.com) just moved here from L.A., and hasn't been much impressed with our club scene. "In other cities, clubs don't shut down so early, and there's a more diverse mix of people," she says. "You can also get a real cocktail and great food in a relaxed area. That's what seems to be missing."

This sort of complaint is a big reason why Storyville owner Brian Lesser recently decided to make over his ultra-lounge, Saint, and rename it for the famous '50s jazz club that once stood in the same space. "Back when Saint opened in 2002, it was the first nightlife spot in the city to really try and include grown-ups," says Lesser. "Storyville is the next step toward that."

Redesigned as a dance club/speakeasy-era lounge, it sports a separate dining area named the "Bordello Room," which takes reservations and functions as an independent restaurant. To fire it up, Lesser tapped Sel de la Terre alum Louis DiBiccari, who whipped up a serious menu of modernized, retro dishes—hanger steak Wellington with pickled shiitakes, guinea hen pot pie—served family-style to encourage lively dining. The beverage program is another area of reinvention. William "English Bill" Codman, formerly of Woodward at Ames, heads up a craft-cocktail menu that replaces standard, from-a-mix drinks with intricate creations like fizzes infused with sage and pineapple juice and smashes with fresh-squeezed lemon and amaretto. "Sitting in the Bordello Room having dinner, you don't even know there's basically a dance party going on in the next room," DiBiccari says. "The point is that the two aren't on top of each other." Not to mention, the kitchen serves until 2 am, which means no more plastic seats and gummy, lukewarm burgers before bedtime.

Short of changing the city's regulations, though, not much can be done about the 2 am limit. "It's almost impossible to do late-night food in Boston," says Bijou co-owner Kevin Fitzpatrick, who's been a club promoter in town since 1994. "So we offer to-go bags right up until 2 am."

As for Rodriguez's "horrible, unrecognizable techno," the antidote is part of what Descent is banking on for its success. "Our music program is going to be radically different from the usual noise and Top 40 on dance floors," explains the W Hotel's PR and marketing manager, Max Buccini. "This will be a 120-seat room with huge live performers." Backed by parent company Starwood, the W expects to pull in acts that would normally only play much bigger venues.

Like Storyville, Descent is also spotlighting a cocktail program from an esteemed mixologist—in this case, Charlotte Voisey, a British import who was named UK Bartender of the Year in 2004. And like both other clubs, the layout clearly delineates the dance area from the lounge. "So no one will be spilling a drink on your back while you're trying to relax," adds Buccini. But it's the music, he hopes, that will draw a varied clientele. "Kind of like at Stella, where you've got a professional, after-work crowd mixed with gays at the bar, people coming from the 'burbs and kids who come to rage. We want a little bit of everybody. It's a delicate balance, but who's there will make or break a place."

Ideal clientele is the Holy Grail of nightlife, of course. "We'll get our regulars by showing them new faces," says Fitzpatrick. And to keep potential customers curious, none of the three newcomers have set theme nights, but instead rotate deejays and live performers. "You want to keep everyone guessing, or they won't come back again and again," he says. "They'll just get bored."

IT'S IMPOSSIBLE TO PREDICT THE future of a business like nightclubs. They have a flash-in-the-pan life cycle: red-hot and impossible to get into for the first six months, then relegated to has-been status for years afterward until they reinvent themselves, or shutter altogether. Survival hinges on a dependable, but often chimerical, base of regulars.

To try to win loyal clubbers, neither Descent nor Storyville demand cover charges (Bijou charges $30). Lesser sees this as crucial. "It's a game-changer," he says. "People can come in early or late, other friends can join them, and it's less of a financial commitment." Furthermore, Descent has a priority-seating program for regulars, Bijou has a VIP card program and Storyville doesn't charge for coat check.

Hooks like these are what the new clubs hope will keep the lines moving and the crowds diverse. "We want a little bit of everybody," says Buccini. "That's what makes a place interesting, and Boston's finally starting to get the hint." ✖✖✖

GRIM PEEPER

IN THEIR ANNUAL Halloween burlesque, The Wrathskellar, the Boston Babydolls show more than just their dark sides. For the past six years, this high-energy, glitter-soaked troupe has combined classic burlesque with modern twists, but this year, instead of a stage performance, the ladies have embraced the immersive. They've constructed a physical "Wrathskellar" in a Cambridge storefront, creating a living set for the tale of a haunted club filled with lost souls. Love, betrayal and murder get a healthy dose of bare skin and sequins, all to the tunes of Tom Waits, Leonard Cohen, the Squirrel Nut Zippers and Utë Lemper. Enjoy an evening of exposure with the Babydolls through October.

MELISSA HERRICK

The Wrathskellar runs through October, $20–$25, at 545 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-869-2000) bostonbabydolls.net.

Remember how much fun you had last Halloween? Yeah, didn't think so—like New Year's Eve with facepaint, the holiday can be a bit of a letdown. Make this year's ghoulish bender a winner by hitting Boston Ski and Sports Club's annual BeWicked Ball on Oct. 28 at Church. A DJ, Svedka cocktails and appetizers will provide the setting for tricks and treats. And because BSSC's athletes are notoriously competitive, you better bring your "A" game to the costume contest.

Movies Edited by Kyle Wright

Capsules by Sean Burns

Contagion ★★ ½ Working once again in grand canvas Traffic mode, director Steven Soderbergh's chilling pandemic procedural follows a killer strain of the flu from Gwyneth Paltrow's hacking cough to the far corners of the globe, leaving 12 million people and dozens of Academy Award winners dead in its wake. Soderbergh is a model craftsman fascinated by process, but sometimes he can be a bit too clinical and bloodless for his own good. Ironically, what makes Contagion so effective also turns out to be its undoing, as the movie's stubborn refusal to provide conventional Hollywood payoffs makes it easy to respect and difficult to love. Matt Damon provides the few moments of emotional ballast as a suddenly single dad functioning as our audience surrogate. The first 40 minutes are exceptional, but as the disease spreads, the screenplay stretches itself too thin over too many characters and storylines. It's an expertly mounted, emotionally remote film. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Crazy, Stupid, Love ★★★ Unlike other freaky-deaky method actors like Sean Penn and Nicolas Cage, Ryan Gosling happens to look like a movie star, and this too-carefully structured romantic comedy benefits immeasurably from his brand of anarchy. Backing up a bit, the film stars Steve Carell (who also produced) as a middle-aged husband unceremoniously dropped by his childhood sweetheart (Julianne Moore) after she's had an ill-advised dalliance with a co-worker (a smarmy-as-ever Kevin Bacon). Adrift and alone for the first time in his life, Carell takes up residence on a barstool at a demographically unfriendly singles' haunt. The self-pity is enough to interrupt Gosling's idle rich, bar-cruising lothario, and the following makeover is at first a dizzying sort of Pygmalion. Sadly, Crazy, Stupid, Love can't sustain that level of manic invention and eventually settles into something more conventional, but pleasant all the same. Luckily, by then we're invested enough in these characters to cheer for the feel-good ending. (In the suburbs.)

Drive ★★★★ Played by Ryan Gosling in a silk scorpion jacket and an omnipresent toothpick, the nameless lead is a Hollywood stunt-driver moonlighting as a robbery wheelman. He's an absurd, larger-than-life archetype, and the giddy pleasure of director Nicholas Winding Refn's entertaining Drive is how in love with its very "movie-ness" this movie is. Set in the present day, yet pulsating with a distinctly 1980s glow, it's a boilerplate genre picture where every shot seems designed to make you nod your head appreciatively and mutter the word "awesome." There's a bag of money and some guns, plus one genuinely terrifying turn by (of all people) Albert Brooks as a quick-tempered gangster. It's romantic, in all definitions of the word, positioning performers as icons in front of expansive Los Angeles landscapes, with Gosling emerging as a Tiger Beat Steve McQueen. OK, so it's a bit self-conscious. But Drive is pulp delirium. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

50/50 ★★★ The prospect of dying young is no laughing matter, but in the case of 50/50, it makes for an extremely awkward, heartfelt and funny film. Directed by Jonathan Levine and written by Will Reiser, it has the rough sting of real life at its (slightly compromised) core. Reiser was diagnosed with a rare form of cancer in his early 20s. His loyal best friend during the ordeal was the kind of slovenly loudmouth usually played in movies by Seth Rogen. Except Reiser's best friend really is Seth Rogen, who always seems to turn up in movies as a variation of himself anyway. Joseph Gordon-Levitt stars here, and 50/50 is great at letting him and the other up-and-coming movie stars in the cast play to their strengths. The movie gets better as it goes along. "Did you ever see Terms of Endearment?" Gordon-Levitt asks at one point. The shaggy, laughing-through-the-tears M.O. of James L. Brooks' cable classic is obviously what 50/50 is striving for. Half the time it even gets there. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Footloose ★★ You're probably wondering, "Why?" The answer is beside the point if you find yourself in line for director Craig Brewer's exuberant rehash of the silly 1984 musical. Original screenwriter Dean Pitchford is credited here, presumably because nobody even bothered changing most of the dialogue. It's the same movie with better dancing and worse acting. Much worse. Local boy Kenny Wormald stars as Ren McCormack, an out-of-town troublemaker new to the stuffy town of

PATRIOT GAME

Clooney and Gosling explore some unhappy campaign trails.

The Ides of March ★★★
Starring Ryan Gosling, George Clooney, Philip Seymour Hoffman, Paul Giamatti, Jeffrey Wright, Evan Rachel Wood and Marisa Tomei. Screenplay by Clooney, Grant Heslov and Beau Willimon. Directed by Clooney. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

SOLID, IF A LITTLE STUFFY, George Clooney's latest directorial effort announces its retro intentions from the outset, with big block-letter credits and a drumroll score punctuated by a lonely trumpet. Hollywood's throwback artist is at it again, as The Ides of March finds Clooney in super-serious, Alan J. Pakula mode, remembering the fabled time in the '70s when talky political pictures were the rule, not the exception.

Clooney is the least modern of our movie stars, seemingly transplanted from a bygone era and wearing the references on his sleeve. His tragically overlooked directorial debut, Confessions of a Dangerous Mind, was a corkscrewed take on Pakula's The Parallax View and remains his best effort. The film sent Gong Show host Chuck Barris spiraling into a phantasmagoria of sex-guilt and political assassinations, punctuated by scene changes from the early-1950s TV plays that captured Clooney's attention when he was growing up.

Adapted by Clooney, Grant Heslov and Beau Willimon from Willimon's off-Broadway play, Farragut North, The Ides of March stars Ryan Gosling as a suave Washington, D.C., up-and-comer working on a hotly contested primary campaign for Clooney's too-good-to-be-true front-runner. Rife with inside-the-Beltway banter and the fascinating details of a high-stakes operation, the first half hands over some deliciously meaty chucks of barbed dialogue to its to-die-for cast of character actors.

Philip Seymour Hoffman brings the gruff as Clooney's surly campaign manager, who's struggling to wrangle crucial delegates via an endorsement from Jeffrey Wright's withdrawn rival. Since this is Washington, there are off-the-books favors expected in return for such kindness, but Clooney's white knight remains stubbornly averse to backroom deals. (He's also an agnostic, so the fact that he could even get this far running for office qualifies the film as science fiction.)

As the opposition's chief weasel, Paul Giamatti spends the movie shrouded in almost complete darkness, periodically popping his head out of the shadows to make a meal out of his monologues. Marisa Tomei comes and goes as the kind of reporter you wish you could trust, if you didn't know better. Gosling is an idealistic pragmatist, but he's also got an eye for the interns.

The Ides of March works best when it sticks with the day-to-day grind of a life in politics. Stump speeches, poll numbers, TV spots and the right way to spin a story. It only gets into trouble when the melodrama appears. Turns out that an intern (Evan Rachel Wood) has a few secrets of her own, and maybe Clooney's candidate isn't so squeaky clean. Before long, everybody's scamming somebody, and those early cronyism deals seem like small potatoes. Cinematographer Phedon Papamichael does a mean Gordon Willis impression, bathing the performers in ever-encroaching shadows.

Brilliantly performed across the board, at the very least this film answers a long lingering question: Can Philip Seymour Hoffman and Paul Giamatti appear in the same picture without canceling each other out?

Casting these two portly actors as sides of the same coin is something of a masterstroke. They both appear to subsist exclusively on barely suppressed anger and cigarettes. Even more curious was handing Gosling the role of a fast-talking spin doctor. This suddenly ubiquitous young stud can always be counted on to work in a different time signature than his costars, which is part of what made his Asperger's avenger in the recent Drive so instantly iconic.

Before long, everybody's scamming somebody, and those early cronyism deals seem like small potatoes.

Playing the Democratic wet dream of a candidate, Clooney can't resist laying out his own personal talking points on a variety of current issues. (I'd probably vote for him.) And yet there's always something slightly sinister and removed about the performance. He's a bit overcalculating and remote, in that robotic way most political figures seem to end up after the campaign grind.

So why is this finely crafted, well-acted movie almost impossible to get excited about? For starters, the idea of corruption in politics is no great shakes. Furthermore, I think Clooney's clipped professionalism behind the camera might be to blame. The scene work is tight, concise and fully functional. It's buttoned down, lacking Confessions' manic craziness.

Clooney's directing style matches his acting, lean and no-nonsense. He keeps the same measured tones even during the movie's more lurid second half. Much like his Good Night and Good Luck, this a sleek, striking adult entertainment that, ultimately, feels smaller than it probably should. ✖✖✖

Bomont, where teenage dancing is a crime. Dennis Quaid takes over John Lithgow's role as the overprotective pastor, but how I wish they could've persuaded Kevin Bacon to take the part. Dancing With the Stars' Julianne Hough, who doesn't look a day under 30, plays the preacher's rebellious teenage daughter, and, once again, we spend a lot of time worrying about whether or not these kids will be allowed to have a prom. Mysteriously time-warped with popped collars and skinny ties, it's high energy, low-impact fluff. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Guard ★★★ ½ Suffused with a strain of romantic Irish fatalism, writer/director John Michael McDonagh's debut plunders the clichés of a thousand interracial buddy-cop comedies, emerging with an ode to shabby nobility that's stranger and sadder than expected. It's also fookin' hilarious—or at least that's how Sergeant Gerry Boyle might describe it. Played by Brendan Gleeson in one of the great performances of his career. Boyle's a steely-eyed lout, whiling away the hours in a state of perpetual boredom and wasted disappointment, punctuated by occasional visits from Dublin prostitutes. But when a gang of English cocaine traffickers arrive in town, so does a smooth-talking Southern dandy from the FBI (Don Cheadle, master of the reaction shot). Turns out that, like a plus-sized version of every great Humphrey Bogart and Clint Eastwood character, there's a strict moral code lurking somewhere beneath Boyle's anti-social dissolution. The Guard is raw, profane and strangely moving. (At Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

The Help ★★ This surprise smash is being enjoyed by an audience that has gone sadly underserved by the months-long barrage of superheroes and giant robots that typically define summer entertainment. On one hand, we should rejoice, as this is a female-driven picture with no special effects. But it's a troubling film all the same. Based on Kathryn Stockett's best seller, The Help takes place in Jackson, Miss., circa 1962, when audience surrogate Skeeter Phelan (Emma Stone) returns home to her family's plantation and has an ideological falling-out with her well-to-do childhood friends over their nasty racist behavior. The slightly icky wish-fulfillment fantasy allows white audiences to rally around Skeeter's do-gooder activism while rendering her peers as cartoon monsters. It's a very pleasant lie, sending you out of the cinema on a high note. But what vexes me is why the lie even needed to be told in the first place. Aren't there enough true stories of heroism from the civil rights era? Is it really appropriate for us to all stand and applaud this courageous, fictional white girl? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Killer Elite ★★ The fact that the most emotionally honest moment in this picture finds Robert De Niro helping himself to a giant bag of money is probably all you need to know about the latest Jason Statham vehicle. As mentor to the bald-headed butt-kicker, De Niro is kidnapped by a nefarious sheik, and the ransom is a list of retired SAS agents that Statham must dispatch. Preposterously claiming to be based on a true story (and having no connection to the Sam Peckinpah film of the same name), this muddled thriller isn't just set in 1980, at times it feels like it was made in the '80s. A bevy of indistinguishable contract killers with muttonchop sideburns and lousy facial hair take turns trying to explain the labyrinthine plot mechanics, but the film only comes to life whenever Statham is facing off against Clive Owen's surly British operative, who's probably in such a bad mood all the time because his mustache makes him look like a child molester. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Margaret ★★ Shot in the fall of 2005 and tangled up in juicy rumors, lawsuits and editing-room disputes, playwright Kenneth Lonergan's sophomore effort has become the Chinese Democracy of American art-house films. But much like Axl Rose's eternally delayed magnum opus, Margaret's eventual unveiling turns out to be a jumbled anticlimax. A grief-stricken portrait of post-9/11 New York City, it's a curious time capsule—and not just because of how young these actors look. Anna Paquin stars as a bratty Manhattan private-school kid complicit in a bus accident that results in a pedestrian's grisly demise. Can you really go back to doing geometry homework after something like that? At an uncomfortable 150 minutes, it's either an hour too short or an hour too long, with lurching, mid-scene transitions and inconsistent color-timing issues that are shocking for a major release. Word around Hollywood was that Lonergan didn't know how to finish Margaret. The final product may be a lot of things, but finished isn't one of them. (At Boston Common.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punch line comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Moneyball ★★★ ½ Brad Pitt finally surrenders and turns in the kind of megawatt movie-star performance we've all been waiting for. As a pal noted, "He's playing the role exactly the way Robert Redford would've in the 1970s." Based on Michael Lewis' best seller, Moneyball stars Pitt as Oakland A's general manager Billy Beane, a once-promising player who washed out young. Now he's stuck trying to run a financially crippled franchise in a league where the big teams have gotten so rich that the smaller markets have been priced right out of the competition. All this inside-baseball talk is served up for your consideration by screenwriter Aaron Sorkin, who puts his trademark rapid-fire banter in the service of surprisingly sturdy and traditional underdog-sports-movie formulas. When it's at its best, Moneyball is preposterously entertaining, as Beane and partner in crime Peter Brand (Jonah Hill) hustle sports agents, owners and rival GMs. It's a movie about the game of baseball that contains surprisingly little actual baseball. It's more like The Bad News Bears with an economics degree. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Real Steel ★ I'm not sure which poor life decisions led to, at 36 years of age, watching a robot fight a cow. Whatever they were, it's obviously time to rethink them. Such is the quandary of Real Steel, yet another film illustrating just how dull it can be watching giant computer-generated androids pounding the crap out of each other. Set in an unspecified future when robot boxing is the most popular sport in America, the film stars Hugh Jackman as a grizzled ex-fighter suddenly stuck with custody of his estranged 11-year-old son (Dakota Goyo, a graduate from the Jake Lloyd School of Child Acting). Would you be shocked if I told you that the kid helps Jackman turn his life around and finally become a decent dad? Can the underdog get a shot at the title? More importantly, will there be a single scene in this movie that isn't agonizingly predictable? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

What's Your Number? ★ ½ This abysmal exercise in female self-hatred squanders the talents of Anna Faris, a screwball comedian born 50 years too late and tragically incapable of landing a role in a decent picture. Faris stars as a scatterbrained 20-something who takes a fluffy article in a women's magazine too seriously. Improbably convinced that she's already bedded the maximum number of men deemed acceptable by society before spinsterhood becomes inevitable, Faris begins combing through her exes hoping that one of these frogs might be a prince. Assisting her on this quest is her proudly promiscuous neighbor (played by Captain America himself, Chris Evans). They have terrific chemistry, making the rom-com rigging and idiotic plot devices all the more insufferable. Shot locally a couple years back, you'll be distracted wondering how quickly she can walk from State Street to Porter Square. Any movie in which Faris plays basketball at the Garden in her underwear can't be all bad, but it's close. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Cat Scratch Fever

A Purrfect Murder

Seeing Pet Sematary as a child is nearly as scarring as realizing Mittens didn't go live with a nice family in the country. A reunion with your dearly departed pet might sound like fun, but not if its reanimated corpse only wants to rip your face from your skull. Based on Stephen King's novel, the creepy classic is particularly timely now that zombies are très chic and Halloween approaches. Catch it at the Coolidge Corner Theatre Oct. 21–22 as part of the @fter Midnite series.

"I KNEW BREASTFEEDING WAS BEST FOR MY BABY, BUT IN THE BEGINNING IT WAS CHALLENGING."

"I wasn't always sure how to tell if my baby was eating well or if she was hungry. We both had a lot to learn.

My Peer Counselor was there for me when I needed her. WIC also helped me get a pump. Things are much easier now.

I'm proud that I'm breastfeeding!"

EYE OF THE TIGER

Annie Clark infuses empathy into St. Vincent's synthetic pop.

St. Vincent plays at Royale on Nov. 4.

Tina Tyrell

PETITE, FAIR AND STYLISH on the surface, Annie Clark defies preconceptions when she transforms into her indie-rock alter ego, St. Vincent.

She constructs stark, orchestrated pop around her cool, luxuriant voice. Yet like a siren luring sailors to the jagged rocks, she also injects dark discord and knotty flights of lead guitar that reflect her early prog metal grounding in bands such as King Crimson and Iron Maiden.

"Where the lunatic fringe and conventional pop wisdom meet is the place that's most compelling to me," Clark says. "There are a lot of ways to make more esoteric things palatable, and I think groove is one of those main components."

It certainly became a main component on Strange Mercy, St. Vincent's third and most sophisticated album. "Every song had to have a really sturdy groove," Clark says of the album, which she made in her native Texas with producer John Congleton. "As long as the groove feels good, you can take a lot of chances on top of it, because you give the listener this seat on the roller coaster. You're strapped in. Don't worry about it. You're going to be fine."

Her first two pastiche-like albums were composed largely on a laptop, with elements like strings and woodwinds adding baroque ornamentation to 2009's Actor. But Strange Mercy serves up her strengths with stripped-back refinement. Its dense-yet-seductive sound plays up her vocals, streamlines her guitar bursts and cloaks its rhythmic pulse in synthesizer textures. When she plays at Royale on Nov. 4, she'll front a minimalist quartet with a drummer, keyboardist and synthesist.

"With the last record, I was trying to take more orchestral instruments and make them cold-sounding, make them sort of detached," Clark says from a tour stop in Milwaukee.

> "Where the lunatic fringe and conventional pop meet is the place that's most compelling to me."

"On this record, I was trying to do the opposite. I was trying to take synthetic instruments and make more of it, infuse them with empathy."

That emotional directness could be attributed to a period of grieving, though Clark declines to share the details. "Two thousand ten was the year of the tiger, and it was a horrible year," she says, referring to that turbulent cycle in the Chinese zodiac. "I was writing this record from a place of sorting through grief and, in that regard, the music came, I don't want to say easily, but music was the easy part."

Music has come easily to Clark for most of her life. She made up songs by age five, took up guitar at age 12 and composed music for her Dallas high school's production of Alice in Wonderland. She spent a summer vacation as tour manager for the jazz duo Tuck & Patti (guitarist Tuck Andress is her uncle), and the ingenue attended Berklee College of Music before heading for the Big Apple.

"I was like, 'I'm going to make it in New York,' and then I went back to Texas and lived with my parents," says Clark, now 29. Soon, though, she was playing with Dallas pop collective the Polyphonic Spree. "That was just so psychedelic, crazy and so much fun, and the shows got happy to the point of being manic and downright scary—and that was really exciting."

She also toured as a member of Sufjan Stevens' symphonic band, then recorded her 2007 debut Marry Me as St. Vincent, named after the hospital where poet Dylan Thomas died.

Save a few short-lived day jobs, music remained her sole source of income—and her clear career path. "Once I started playing guitar, I just knew that was what I wanted to do," she says. "I never really had a Plan B." ✖✖✖

Adam Blake

Royale Treatment

Spiders Man The writer/producer behind dozens of major artists, from steady-rock Saosin to emo-pop band All-American Rejects, Butch Walker is music's phantom phenom. He now takes on the role of frontman as he teams up with the Black Widows. With lengthy brass notes, lap-steel-guitar sounds and the occasional banjo tweak, the Black Widows complement Walker's raw, whiskey-weathered voice. Their latest collaboration, I Liked It Better When You Had No Heart, emphasizes the poignant, emotional lyrics obscured by Walker's tattooed sleeves and grungy flannel duds. Hear them when the band hits Royale on Oct. 22. Kathleen Godbold

Pergolesi Stabat Mater

Rinaldo Alessandrini, conductor and harpsichord
Liesbeth Devos, soprano
Emily Righter, mezzo-soprano

Friday, October 28 • 8pm
Sunday, October 30 • 3pm
Jordan Hall at NEC

Italian baroque specialist Rinaldo Alessandrini leads a program of Baroque jewels, with Pergolesi's achingly beautiful Stabat Mater at the heart of the concert. Alessandrini also performs Bach's Harpsichord Concerto in D Major.

If You Want the Best!

The Bedford Village Inn was founded in a spirit of classical simplicity and dedicated to the belief that gracious entertaining should seem effortless. Everything we do—from the briefest business luncheon, to the largest wedding reception—is meticulously orchestrated to please. And everything we are—simple American architecture, peaceful rural countryside, classic New England Contemporary Cuisine, and attentive staff—is meant to support the occasion that has been entrusted to us.

Business and pleasure mix beautifully at the Bedford Village Inn. We provide excellent spaces for important business functions and elegant social gatherings both large and small. A perfect fit for large functions, our Great Hall overlooks the main house, lawns, and lush gardens. More intimate business meetings are perfect for our meeting rooms and guest rooms. The BVI is New Hampshire's longest running recipient of the AAA Four Diamond Award in dining and lodging.

Horsing Around

In Between Dreams While traditionalists are concerned with changes to their medium brought by digital media, photographer Tom Chambers turns the problem on its head. The International Photography Award–winner takes advantage of new technology, using it to craft fantastical photomontages. From the liminal space between childhood and adulthood to the fragile relationship between man and his environment, Chambers' pieces evoke wonder and eerie beauty. Dive into his visions at the Chase Young Gallery through Oct. 30. Casey Rackham

Double Body Bag It

Murder He Wrote

Fans of Showtime's popular Dexter couldn't wait for the TV series to return for a sixth season, but bookworms were clamoring for Jeff Lindsay's sixth installment of his novels. In Double Dexter, the blood-splatter analyst/serial killer is tracking someone who's decided to play copycat to his own murderous methodology. Brookline Booksmith brings Lindsay to the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Oct. 26 to gush about the thriller.

ISLANDS IN A SCENE

The Company We Keep

The Harvest Dinner, hosted by Friends of Boston's Homeless on Long Island, had me wondering why the pilgrims waited until November to sit down for the first Thanksgiving.

The corn was freshly picked like the rest of the produce from the program's organic farm—in the middle of Boston Harbor, no less! The sunset was stunning, as was the view of the skyline, and a cocktail reception at the farm was followed by dinner at Camp Harborview prepared by top chefs Gordon Hamersley, Jody Adams, Barbara Lynch and Joanne Chang.

The meal blew everyone out of the water, and the wine wasn't half-bad, either, flowing freely among guests that included activist John Rosenthal and his other half, Maureen, cute preggers board member Candice Wolk, snugglebunnies Philip Lovejoy and Jim Moses, Southern iconoclast Less Arnold, Yankee iconoclast Trearty Bartley, blue-blooded booze distiller Dave Willis and one person who remarked, "Organic farm? Orgasmic tomatoes!"

On a serious note, one of the speakers praised the shelter's kitchen—the city's largest, which serves 62,000 meals per month.

"On any given night, a good deal of our population are either alcoholic or drug addicted," he said, to which a guest whispered, "On any given night, the people I'm hanging out with are either alcoholic or drug-addicted."

Cash, Checks and Credit Cards Accepted

When I turn 200, I want a birthday party just like Mass. General Hospital's, with a dinner for 1,000 of my besties (many of whom will have given me generous gifts), video greetings from at least two presidents (though I'd pass on having Henry Kissinger there to describe every medical condition he's ever had) and performances by such tremendous talents as the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, the Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra and soloist Dr. Claudius Conrad (who seems to be heterosexual, but for whom my late grandmother might forgive me for being gay—he's a doctor, a concert pianist AND a Ph.D.! Oy vey!).

On-hand for the festivities: cochairs Cathy Minehan, Henri Termeer and Chad Gifford, restaurateur and car buff Matt Burns, the ever-generous Bill Achtmeyer and the stunning Alli, advertising legend Jack Connors, banking behemoth Ira Stepanian, Senate president Theresa Murray, MIT president Susan Hockfield, and one person who went so far as to say that Kissinger (accompanied by his socialite wife, Nancy) was a "war criminal who belonged on trial in the Hague." (For the record—that'd be me.)

Otherwise, it was a thoroughly delightful evening, and I look forward to seeing all of you at my 200th, although you can start giving me generous gifts as soon as you'd like.

Want Some Cheese With That?

If, as Voltaire wrote, all is for the best in the best of all possible worlds, then Opening Night at the Huntington Theater lived up to its philosophical hype.

The evening began with a sumptuous dinner and drinks in the BU Theatre paint and scene shops (a word to the wise: don't mess with the props unless you want some theater queen throwing you some serious shade) and continued with the premiere of Candide, which received a well-deserved standing O. Then it was back to the scene shop for an after-party that included the cast.

Spotted throughout the evening were such welcome faces as season sponsors Carol Deane and David Wimberly, raconteur extraordinaire John Spooner (whose wife, Susan, the production commemorates) and all their children, as well as the aptly named Fancy Zilberfarb and her husband, Jeff, latter-day That Girl Dola Stemberg, the ever-elegant Marilyn Keane, philanthropists nonpareil Linda and Dan Waintrup, Chestnut Hillions Bob Grinberg and Debbie Lewis and impish artistic director Peter Dubois, who had me simultaneously wetting my pants with laughter and ordering yet another glass of wine.

Speaking of which, overheard at the bar:

"The chardonnay's not bad. It's French."

"It's hard to find a bad French chardonnay."

"It's even harder to find French chardonnay at a fund-raiser."

"True… the cab sucks, though." ✖✖✖

The IMPROPER

Reality Check

Nietzsche wrote that the ancient Greeks constructed illusions so they could block out the horror of an unfathomable universe. They invented gods and poetry to give their lives order, trying to ignore the chaos that lurks in the dark like an axe murderer stinking of retsina. But it was only when they gazed into the maelstrom, say by watching a gory Sophocles tragedy, that they could embrace the full ecstasy and terror of being human.

Looking at the state of my desk, I feel very human, indeed. But reality is a bitch, so I like to conjure illusions about it: I have many friends and attractive facial hair; my coworkers consider me mature, sober and not even remotely the sort of person who'd make inappropriate comments about Nick's love life; nobody thinks these letters are full of pompous classical references. La, la, la. It works, see?

Perception is reality. People perceive that a college degree is worth a mortgage, so it is. A Louis Vuitton handbag assumes a $1,500 price tag and another credit rating shuffles off this mortal coil. That's the foundation of the luxury market. In some ways, this is amusing, like hearing Sean Connery say, "Andrew Rimas is a city magazine editor." But even though you get as much sparkle from a cubic zirconia as you do from a diamond, there's a nagging sense that reality, in all its howling weirdness, can't be ignored. Hence the matter of quality. Some things, like the cheese trolley at L'Espalier or the lining inside a Jeff Lahens sport coat, are simply better than others.

To the Victors Go the Foils

RICH DISH

TO ANSWER YOUR first question, slightly metallic. To answer your second, Bricco chef Gianni Caruso has a question of his own: "What can be a more elegant touch than gold?" For the capper on his porcini risotto with Parmesan and truffle butter, Caruso lays down about $5 worth of 24-karat gold leaf, like Rockefeller wrapping his leftovers. At $26, the plate offers an accessible taste of excess. "It's so bright; it's the very last delicate touch, like a shaving of truffles," says Caruso. "Some people just use parsley leaves."

Good Eats

Bowled Over

The setup is brilliant. After saucing the thick-cut, house-made chitarra with a white-truffle emulsion, executive chef Robert Sisca shaves precious Alban fungi over the top before covering the dish with a porcelain cloche. When the server unveils your meal, that nutty, musty, earthy perfume rushes up to remind you why truffles are the mushroom holy grail—and why fine diners splurge for them every fall.

Beauty

UNDER MY SKIN

"Have you abandoned me?" These are the first words out of my longtime aesthetician's mouth when she shines a (very) bright light on my face.

"I've just been doing an at-home peel," I say. She shoots me an incredulous look. "It's Dr. Dennis Gross Alpha Beta Peels," I parry. She's unconvinced. "The new extra-strength version." Her expression softens; she nods with potential forgiveness.

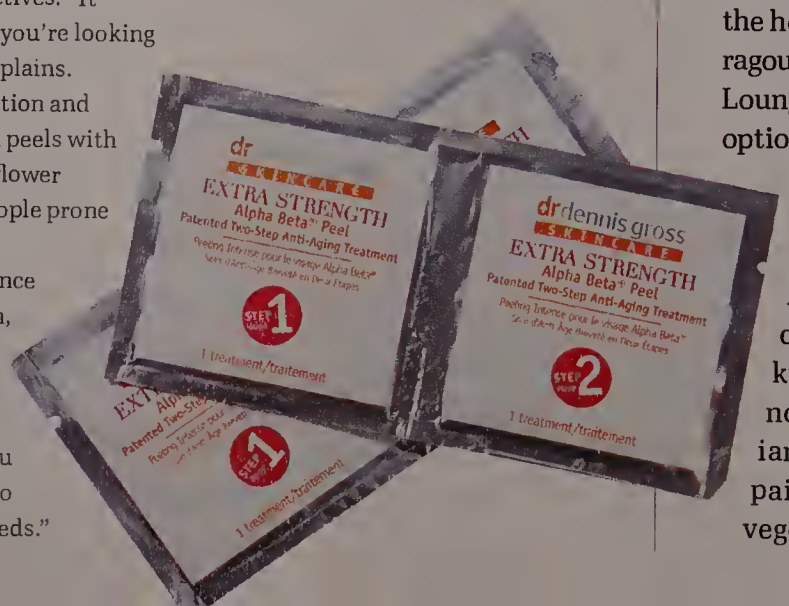
Salon Marc Harris Three locations in Boston. salonmarcharris.com.



For the last few years, at-home peels have done a fair-enough job of exfoliation, but they haven't been sufficiently forceful to make any particular difference—certainly not enough to supplant regular facials. On the flip side, medical-grade peels have been harsh, causing you to resemble a creature from the crypt for up to seven days afterward. Now, somewhere between the two, a happy medium exists.

"The peels I do are so subtle, you can go on a date, even at its heaviest peel time," says Debbie Macomber, owner of Baby Face Skin Spa, who's earned a cult following for her laser and peel know-how. "But three of them will, over a few months, get you the same ultimate effect as a heavy-duty version that would keep you hiding for a week."

At Salon Marc Harris, spa director Anne-Cecile Curot serves up a roster of peels—all at different levels of intensity and with various directives. "It depends on what you're looking to correct," she explains. "Hyper-pigmentation and scars benefit from peels with a combination of flower acids, whereas people prone to breakouts need something to balance sebum production, like our Tomato Peel. The important thing is that the type you do is customized to what your skin needs."

Which is, of course, the downside with at-home peels—even the effective ones (like Extra Strength Dr. Dennis Gross) are one-size-fits-all. But at least you know you're getting some decent exfoliation... between visits to the experts, natch. "Sometimes all you need is two peels during the winter to restore your skin, then through the spring and summer, you can just keep up with facials," says Curot. Which means you can't count your aesthetician out—so mine may just forgive me.

CLIO'S COLONY

And a Bel ringing in Roslindale

CLEAN SLATE AKA Bistro

OUT IN LINCOLN, AKA Bistro is morphing into Clio's country cousin. Damien Brockway has left Oringer HQ to become chef de cuisine of the French side of AKA's bicultural menu. He joins executive chef/co-owner Chris Chung (formerly of Uni); pastry chef Jillian Rosenberg (Clio) and general manager/co-owner Christian Touche, who ran Clio's dining room for 12 years. Brockway's new dishes include sea bass with Belgian endive and salsify, and seared duck breast with red cabbage, rutabaga, hibiscus and cocoa nibs.

PERHAPS IT'S NOT the next South End, but the culinary options are multiplying in restaurant-friendly Roslindale. One recent opening is Bel Lounge Cuisine, which features French, Haitian and West Indian fare. No halfway-hidden, hole-in-the-wall storefront, it's a cozy, white-tablecloth eatery whose chef, Xavier Fritz, has worked stints at Maison Robert and L'Espalier. "He's a master," says owner and Haiti native Lee Gilot.

Open daily for lunch and dinner, the menu offers reasonable prices and dishes like red snapper and, the house favorite, lamb shank with white bean ragout. Currently possessing a cordials license, Bel Lounge bartenders bolster the beer and wine options with a lineup of exotic martinis.

CHEF RAYMOND OST of Sandrine's rightfully prides himself on his hearty Alsatian specialties like sausage-laden choucroute and bacon-topped flammekuch, yet his Harvard Square restaurant is now prime real estate for hungry vegetarians. This master chef is now serving up a pair of equally hearty, meat-free dishes like vegetable ravioli with tomato-basil broth.

TRADITIONAL VALUES

Saloons are often thought of as Wild West watering holes for spur-sporting outlaws. But at David Flanagan's new Davis Square outpost, there won't be a 10-gallon hat or Appaloosa in sight. His Saloon is inspired more by pre-Prohibition New York City than Judge Roy Bean, the sort of place where money men sipped whiskey before the temperance movement got out of hand. Speakeasy-themed bars are all the rage of late, but Flanagan insists this one's different. "It's all about craft cocktails, but I'm more interested in the cocktails that inspired those," he says. "These are the originals."

That's an overriding theme that finds its way onto executive chef Derek Clough's unfussy menu. "Most of this isn't pub food as Americans know it," he says, noting options like the ploughman's platter and garlicky brandade. "This is the kind of food that immigrants brought with them to America, so it's authentic in that way." Most items will be shareable and small, but some, including a whole roast chicken or steak and kidney pie, are large enough to serve a crowd. Clough isn't a stranger to playing with classics, training under Thomas Keller at Bouchon before joining Flanagan upstairs at Foundry on Elm, where he'll continue to oversee the menu.

A grand staircase shuffles patrons into a shadowy foyer Flanagan predicts will host overflow when the horseshoe-shaped bar gets too crowded. Hand-carved wood accents, including a pair of towering doors believed to have once hung in the home of Pete Townsend, are the primary points of interest and provide a formal contrast to the mismatched wrought-iron chandeliers. Tobacco leather banquettes line the exposed brick walls and offer refuge for those who've enjoyed one-too-many Marie Antoinette–sized tipples.

The bar will also serve patrons at the freshly renovated Davis Square Theater, an adjoining 170-seat venue that was a landmark in Somerville when it hosted Jimmy Tingle. The Boston Comedy Festival will christen the stage, making way for the Actors' Shakespeare Project and other acts come winter. Culture with a glass of history sounds like a proper education. KYLE WRIGHT

Q&A

MOUTHING OFF

Sandra Bernhard has been a comedy icon and an actress for more than 30 years. She's also a Grammy-nominated musician. Bernhard brings her one-woman show, I Love Being Me, Don't You? to Oberon through Nov. 4.

Does acting overlap with comedy?
I consider myself to be a performer and an entertainer. There's comedy, music, burlesque. A show like this feeds everything that I do, and it's all connected.

Is there pressure being a gay icon?
I have high expectations for myself, so there's pressure from that. I mean, really, I feel a great amount of delight to be able to perform for people who've been fans.

What surprises people about you?
Most people don't know that I sing, or that I'm good at it. I take music very seriously.

Has your act softened as you've aged?
I've gotten warmer in my life in general as I've aged. That was a very conscious decision. As you age, you either close down or you open up.

How has social media changed what it's like to be a celebrity?
I don't look at myself as a celebrity. I look at myself as an artist. I think Twitter is great because it's a constant way to put stuff out there that may or may not have made it into my show.

What do you say to someone who's just starting out?
If you don't have something unique to offer, go find yourself before you start sharing. KYLE WRIGHT

DROPPING SCIENCE

Nick is tested by faith.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

QUESTION 2. When others are getting rattled, do you remain fairly composed? YES: ● MAYBE: 0 NO: 0

The Church of Scientology of Boston offers free "scientometric" intelligence and personality tests. Before my appointment, three separate coworkers offered to come along as protection.

The facts are: Scientology is a faith created by a former science-fiction writer. Devout practitioners believe humans are haunted by the souls of dead space aliens. The church has been accused of fraud and abuse. Some loyalists have their children sign billion-year contracts of service. All of this tends to give people the creeps.

But John Travolta seems content, so at question 49, I was happy to answer: Do you find it easy to be impartial?
Yes: ● Maybe: 0 No: 0

My objectivity was tested at the door, where I was greeted by a kid in a shirt and tie, apparently working as a receptionist—at 2:30 pm on a school day. He passed me off to another adolescent in cheap business attire who led me to a desk in an adjacent room.

Surrounded by coursework and materials for classes promising to teach me values, integrity and "a simple, powerful action that assists children to recover from physical injuries," I penciled through the 200-question test. Alongside innocent, repetitive queries like "Do you smile much?" and "Do you laugh or smile quite readily?" were questions I found odd: "Do you consider the modern 'prisons without bars' system doomed to failure?" and "Are you in favor of color bar and class distinction?"

I answered honestly and turned in the form. In college, I took an aptitude test that claimed I was made to be a flight attendant. I've learned not to put much faith in paperwork.

80. Do you accept criticism easily and without resentment? Yes: 0 Maybe: ● No: 0

Your personality is graphed along 10 points on a scale from -100 to 100. The second adolescent was pointing to the spot detailing my composure, where I'd scored a 20. "Your friends and family find you difficult to be around," he said, reading from a script I couldn't see. As a communicator, I scored a -82. Apparently, this also makes me tough to live with. My guide drew stick figures on the back of his page and penned over smiley faces to make frowns, illustrating the effects of my character flaws. After each summary of my deficiencies, I was assured "we can help you with that."

174. Are you usually truthful with others?
Yes: ● Maybe: 0 No: 0

"Honestly, what were your first impressions when you came here today?" he asked.

"Honestly? I thought you looked really young."

"I get that a lot," he said before adding, "I'm 18," without prompting. Then he brought over the E-meter.

Essentially a crude lie detector, the working premise behind the E-meter is that stressful thoughts possess mass. Holding two metal cylinders, you're told a current is working through your body. A distressing thought is supposed to impede the current's path through your mind and move the needle on the meter.

Concerned about receiving Scientology's wrath and junk mail, I was using a fake name. I had also lied about my profession. But for 10 minutes, I spoke openly with a kid I was sure was holding back truths of his own. He asked about my family, my friends, my love life, and each blip on the meter was treated as a clue toward clearing up my issues. On the topic of drugs, I told him I'd never taken anything considered hard.

"Hey, that used to be me," said a boy who looked years away from shaving.

From there I took to playing with the tin cans in my hands, watching the needle bounce with each squeeze of my fingers.

100. Are you logical and scientific in your thinking? Yes: 0 Maybe: ● No: 0

Before I left, a nervous young man gave me a 20-minute lecture on the connections between affinity, communication and reality. As he stumbled through a prepared script, it became apparent we both had a hard time grasping the principles, but I didn't doubt his sincerity.

I'm not the first person to poke at Scientology. All I can say, from empirical evidence, is the atmosphere is disjointed. Treated as a potential convert, I felt like a shill, with the disciples of this self-help con game the unwitting marks.

145. On subjects about which you are not an expert, are your own ideas of sufficient importance as to tell others? Yes: ● Maybe: 0 No: 0 ×××

COP A FEEL

I JUST CAN'T HIDE MY TRUE FEELINGS ANY LONGER: When I saw the ad asking if someone wants to vent, I had to submit this for the world to see. I, Maria, love police officers and Massachusetts state troopers more than anything else in this entire world. I fully respect each of them and love every little thing—from their uniforms to their cars to the lights on top. I am proud to say it! Maria

Happy 35th birthday:
All I ever wanted was to hold your hand as we walked down Comm. Ave. The perfect Saturday was hopping around Newbury, popping into Ted Baker and eating lunch at Met Back Bay. I ran a half marathon just to say I did it with you. You helped me find my first apartment in Boston. I fell in love with this town and with you, and I believed you when you said we'd live happily ever after. You took my whole heart and threw it away because you're scared of growing up. I hope one day you figure it out, and I hope one day I can walk down these streets and be happy again. Even though you hurt me so much, I still wish I was holding your hand. Bunny

To the driver of MBTA Bus #455:
I was at the stop exactly on time (1:15 pm), but you decided to leave a minute early. I caught you a few yards up, but you ignored me and wouldn't open the door. I waited in the rain, hoping you'd have compassion and let me on. If your peripheral vision is so poor, you shouldn't be a bus driver. Thanks to you, I missed the test I'd been studying for. Failed student

How Luxe Is Your Life?

You envy:

A. Squirrels, because their fur keeps them warm when they don't pay the oil bill.

B. Lindsay Lohan, because at least you're fed in jail.

C. The table next to you at the country club, because they ordered the sturgeon.

The arrival of your bank statement makes you:

A. Hunch, crying, in the shower.

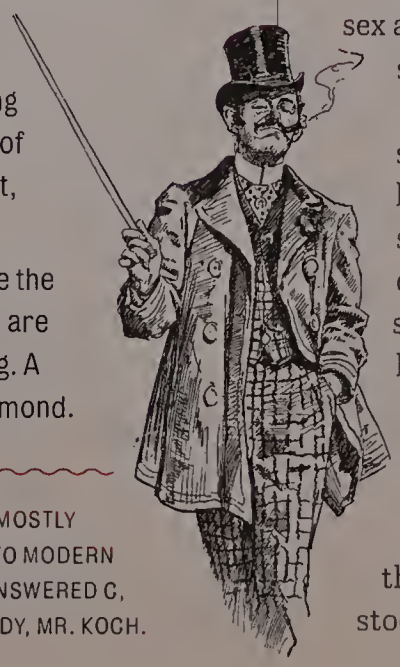
B. Give up unnecessary extravagances, like your insulin shots.

C. No, no, only the staff touches the mail.

You feel excitement when you:

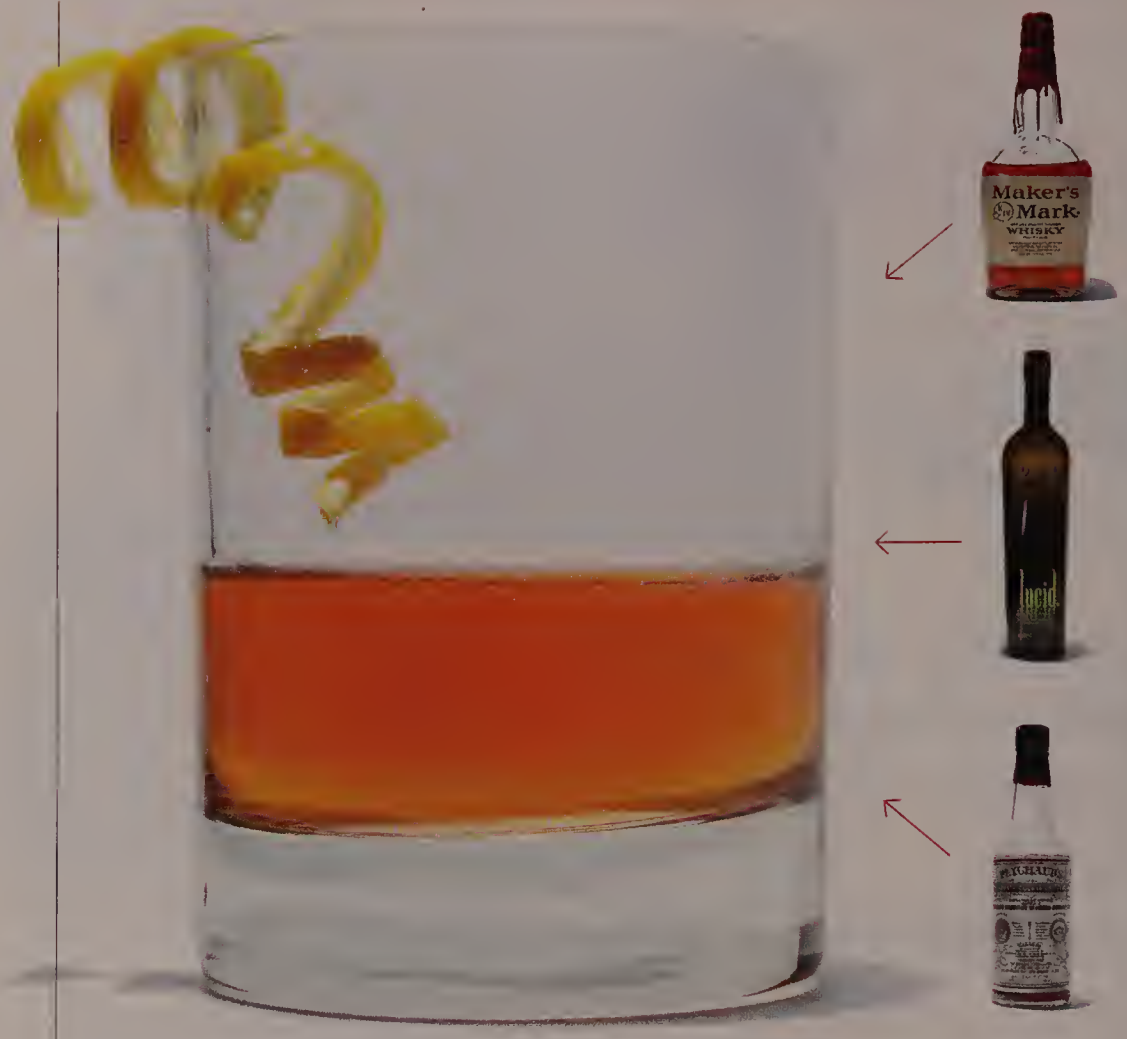
A. Find a quarter on the street.

B. Discover a cheap, synthetic substitute for bologna.



C. Spend a weekend with your oil-baron buddies hunting that most dangerous game: man.

For the holidays, you'll give your girlfriend:



A. A card you drew yourself.

B. A stack of Stop & Shop coupons you've been assiduously clipping over the course of six months. What, they expire?

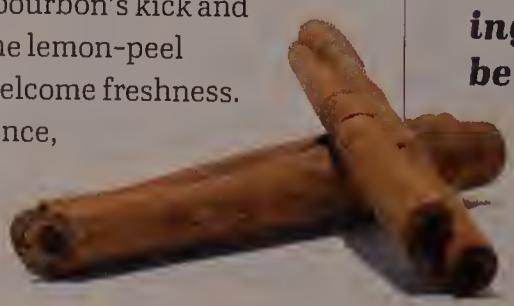
C. Love, because the best things in life are free. Just kidding. A huge, fing diamond.

IF YOU ANSWERED MOSTLY A OR B, WELCOME TO MODERN AMERICA. IF YOU ANSWERED C, YOUR TABLE IS READY, MR. KOCH.

Drink of the Moment

SWANKS A LOT

The Financial District's Bond offers one of the city's most distinct drinking environments. Colossal chandeliers hang from lacquered ceilings above low, tufted seats, while presidents peer through the darkness from the faces of oversized currency. It's an after-work spot where boys' clubs (new and old) converge, and words like "synergy" (in the corporate sense) and "Harvard" (as in, "Will Rupert get in?") slip from the mouths of gray-haired businessmen while Fox News plays in the background.



BOND The Langham, 250 Franklin St., Boston (617-956-8765) boston.bondboston.com

Housed in the former Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, it's got a long tradition of finance-themed cocktails. Past tipples have been dubbed the Euro, the Yen, Equity and Liquidity. But the theme started to feel belabored. Plus, something about, "I'll have two Dirhams and a Subprime Mortgage Crisis with a twist," doesn't have quite the right sex appeal. "So, we decided to start naming them after rich people," says manager Jessica Rosenberg.

THE VANDERBILT ($14) is the liquid equivalent of an it-label skirt suit in the boardroom—a swanky prop designed, in part, to help a minority of lady customers stand out. The lowball cocktail is served neat, a hefty helping of Maker's Mark providing the base. A cinnamon reduction, however, is what makes it special. Rather than spice, it adds warmth and accessibility. Three dashes of Peychaud's bitters and a Lucid Absinthe wash cut the bourbon's kick and make the drink a fun spin on a Sazerac. The lemon-peel garnish is strong on the nose, adding a welcome freshness.

It's a confident cocktail of real substance, proving that, with libations that subvert the old ways of doing business, Bond's stock is high.

WHAT'S YOUR IDEA OF LUXURY?

"I would say, uh, clean clothes."

"Luxury is anything that makes you feel guilty."

"I don't have any ideas of what luxury would be 'cause I've never really lived it."

"I consider myself the male version of Lady Gaga. So luxury for me is Egyptian cotton, and down comforters and silk. We live well here.... I have mattress pads a foot thick lined with down comforters—in my tent."

"Probably the Maserati I saw on Boylston Street the other day."

Down to Fizzness

The folks behind Something Natural are maxed out on sugary, preservative-laden beverages. And they're tired of snooty labels like Evian and Perrier, whose caps announce a whiff of superiority when popped. So the South Boston–based company created something different—crisp and sweet sparkling water in flavors like black cherry, blueberry-lemon and pink grapefruit. In a category falling flat, it's a refreshing, local alternative. ELIZABETH BOMZE

MULL IT OVER

Essays on thinking about thinking

THE WRITER'S BRAIN—at least, the associative twirl of neurons inside Sven Birkerts' head—records experience with heightened sensitivity. These 45 short essays follow a kind of free association that builds from small moments like climbing a ladder, receiving his late father's cigarette lighter, observing a man beg for money on Memorial Drive, or thinking about Saul Bellow and Ernest Hemingway. But more electric events, such as watching with fear as his son's Sunfish capsizes, get Birkerts musing, too.

Sometimes angst-addled, he mulls over old friendships and the different selves of his past.

The Other Walk
by Sven Birkerts

Birkerts lives in Arlington.

Was he the same man who inspired a student years ago, writing comments on her paper that seem alien now? While walking or swimming, Birkerts considers the rhythms of his attentive world-watching. In the water, something mysterious buoys him up as he "moves towards" his thoughts, literally and metaphorically. At Starbucks, he notices a man eavesdropping on his chat with a friend: "He has the power to judge and absolve," Birkerts realizes. So, "To my secret auditor I set out my case." Places he's lived and worked are full of memory's emotional moss. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 95: "We both move on top of the many layers of knowing each other, though they are all there in the conversation somehow, in the tone of the references, the speed of the asides, in the assumptions that fill our pacing with densities that no one eavesdropping could possibly get. Untouched, but there, are the nights when we drank and ate and pumped ourselves up with ambition and argument, as are all the rifts and misfires, the jealousies. The parade of rooms and apartments and new friends brought in, manuscripts given back, endless bluster and insult."

"Looking for love but keep striking out with the ladies?... Hire a Boston WingWoman has the solution." - The Metro

THE HIGH POINTS

Jackson Hole is a sophisticated section of the Wild West.

RANCH DRESSING Views of the Teton Range are just one of Jackson Hole's draws.

IN THE RARE EVENT THAT A friend plans a Wyoming vacation, Bostonians usually respond with a clueless question about bolo ties or cattle wrastlin'. Maybe a Dick Cheney joke. But despite its position in a rectangular flyover state, Jackson Hole is more than just the gateway to Grand Teton and Yellowstone national parks. Renowned for outdoor glories, the valley town (population: less than 10,000) is surrounded by no less than five mountain ranges, but from cuisine to music to performance, there's an overlooked cultural landscape that matches up to the sublime setting.

Between the riches of its land (it ranks among the most expensive real estate in the country) and its residents (Harrison Ford and the Walton family both call it home), Jackson Hole has glamour galore. Thankfully, cash doesn't equate to flash. "People go to Sun Valley to be seen, but people come to Jackson to get away," says one local concierge. Unlike other haughty mountain towns, there's nary a Hummer in sight, and furs are more likely found on moose wandering the town square than on strolling socialites.

First-time guests sometimes book tony slopeside resorts in Teton Village, but it's better to opt for the centrally located Rustic Inn. If this isn't a ski vacation (the town boasts some of the world's premier downhill runs), enjoy a day in the charming village. A ride to the top of Jackson Hole Mountain Resort's tram is a can't-miss for spectacular views.

Of course, Wild West kitsch runs amok. Chuckwagon dinners are still the rage, some bars sport saddles instead of stools and no amount of pride or better judgment can withstand the wave of hokey, back-in-time saloon photos. On the other hand, developments like the Jackson Hole Center for the Arts bring touring productions to the valley and host talks by serious

✓ Traveler's Checks

Jackson Hole Airport is small, and many airlines fly there only during peak seasons. Nearby airports in Salt Lake City, Denver and Idaho Falls require a drive but offer significantly lower fares.

If you're not a skier, plan visits around the arts and film festival (fall), elk-antler auction and Old West Days (spring) or the music festival and wine auction (summer).

SLOPE SPRINGS ETERNAL The town isn't just for skiing.

speakers like Jane Goodall. The National Museum of Wildlife Art showcases works by Warhol, O'Keeffe, Picasso and Rodin in its permanent collection. Jackson Hole naturally has its share of Native American and cowboy art, but the town's treasury is supplemented by the 30-plus galleries featuring artists like Troy Collins, Lance Letscher and Dale Chihuly.

At night, locals flock to restaurants like Rendezvous Bistro and Trio for modern fare in hip settings. Try mountain specialties like elk Bolognese or pan-seared Idaho trout amandine. Spots like these thrive on the energy of young ski bums or well-traveled families, who also frequent the Atelier Ortega where chocolatier Oscar Ortega dishes up hand-painted chocolates and chipotle chocolate pudding to warm up the cold evenings.

Whether visitors are outdoorsy or artsy, a trip with Jackson Hole Wildlife Safaris offers the best of both. Guide Jason Williams sniffs out the locations of bears, wolves, bison and other photogenic fauna. He even offers tips for transforming your pics from postcard snapshots to artistic keepsakes.

When it comes to souvenirs, skip the tourist shops where the same huckleberry bonbons, bison jerky and "moose dropping" candies abound. Instead, search for something more distinctive, like the notebooks, housewares and jewelry from Made and Workshop, two independent boutiques just off the town square. Though your friends may be disappointed by your lasso-less return, these spots offer chic alternatives for bringing the range back home. ✖✖✖

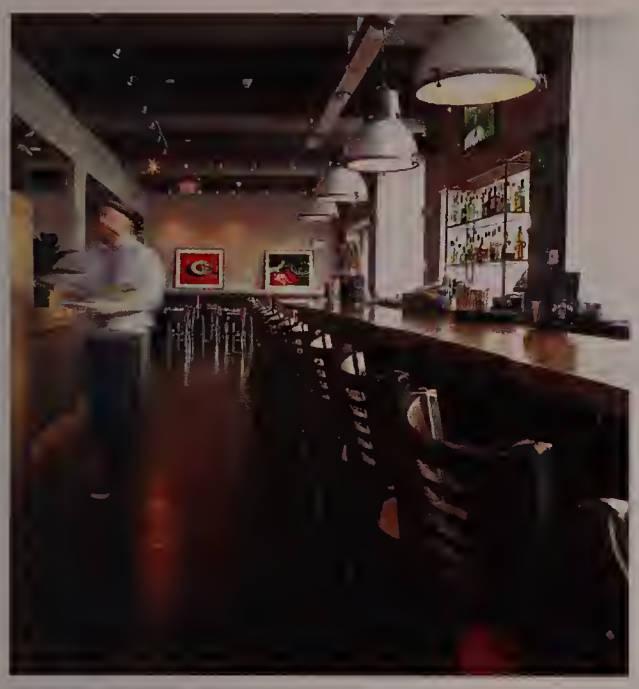
COMMON GOOD

Abigail's has a little something for everyone.

★★★½☆

Abigail's
291 Third St., Cambridge
(617-945-9086)
abigailsrestaurant.net

GRAVY TRAIN Bacon, melted cheese and gravy make the gouda fries especially rich.



SEVEN-YEAR-OLD ABIGAIL Ludwig is delighted by her namesake restaurant, a modern space of polished glass, blond wood and espresso-colored furniture. "She tells everyone that it's her restaurant," says her mother, co-owner Sarah Murnane.

Abigail has a lot to be proud of, not the least of which is that her family has weathered potentially devastating events in starting up their Kendall Square eatery. Abigail's father, executive chef/co-owner James Ludwig, underwent heart surgery shortly before the restaurant opened in May, a procedure which left him paralyzed from the chest down. While Ludwig oversees the menu, the cooking is done by chef de cuisine Jason Lord, formerly of East Coast Grill. Their food strikes a balance between a commitment to local ingredients and a price point to draw locals.

With the exception of a decadent seafood platter ($50)—evidently targeted at people who, were they to perform simple arithmetic, would realize that ordering the oysters, crab claws, etc. à la carte would cost them half the price—nothing on the seasonally revised menu costs over $25. More than half a dozen sandwiches are on offer, including a juicy, softball-sized house-ground burger ($8). Although a child might serve as the restaurant's muse, none of the dishes play to conservative tastes or small stomachs. You'll be as satisfied ordering the "BBQ'd" brisket sandwich ($11)—stuffed with tender, sweet-sauce-smothered beef, a runny fried egg and sautéed peppers and onions—as you would the peppercorn-grilled sirloin ($25)—although the steak seems misnamed, as there wasn't a fleck of pepper to be found when I ordered it. The pan-seared cod ($22) had no flavoring problems. Brown butter and capers emphasized the fish's natural sweetness and complemented sautéed spinach and mushroom sides.

A popular item listed under the "small plates," the roasted marrow bone ($8) is hardly diminutive, and you'd be hard-pressed to eat much else after wrangling with the split femur-sized slab. However, the dish was under-seasoned and served with a gremolata that acted more as a garnish than a flavoring. The few accompanying toast points quickly ran out, leaving just spoonfuls of animal fat without a base. Another meaty but more toothsome option was the gouda fries ($9), a tasty diet-buster topped with crispy bacon and rich chicken gravy, the latter served in a small carafe, so you can measure your own viscous, delicious calories.

Emily Knudsen

SPACED OUT The bar features local brews on draft.

Abigail's won't leave vegetarians starving. Don't miss the soup ($4, cup; $7, bowl), which, on one of my visits, was a minestrone chock full of vegetables. The hearty broth paired well with chewy Iggy's bread and Italian olive oil. There are also salads ($7-$8), a cheese plate ($14) and a veggie burger ($11) made of kale, chickpeas and squash, as well as a farro risotto ($18) with roasted squash, grilled asparagus and arugula. Enriched with a dense vegetable broth, the whole grains had a nutty flavor but could benefit from a binder like cheese or cream.

Pan-seared cod

Like the food, Abigail's beverages touch on trends without taking them too seriously. Rob Iurilli, formerly of the defunct B-Side Lounge, has assembled a long list of cocktails heavy on gin and vodka, but has also created a section of slushies ($9-$10) as well as shots and combos ($6.50-$10). One of these is the aptly named, and brain-smashing, Hadron Collider ($9), a dysfunctional blend of Murphy's Irish Stout, Jameson's Irish Whiskey and Champagne. Beers are sure bets—with a half dozen drafts that include area brews like Pretty Things Jack D'or ($6), Cisco Whale's Tale Pale Ale ($5.50) and Cambridge Brewing Co. hefeweizen ($5.50).

Unlike some of its more famous Cambridge neighbors, Abigail's isn't a fine-dining destination. But it's a clear success as a local restaurant that caters to office workers and nearby residents, and that serves a value-conscious menu with a broad appeal. ✖✖✖

Misadventures in high finance

Read more at improper.com/blogs

AS I WRITE THIS, THE Occupy Wall Street movement is still camped out in now-famous Zuccotti Park. It's easy to see why those people are so committed. Since they set up shop, everything's different. I have a source in New York who confides that Occupy Wall Street has completely changed the behavior of bankers, in that they no longer eat lunch at Zuccotti Park, even when it's really nice out. Power to the people!

I'm just kidding. I have no source on Wall Street. All I know about investing is summed up by that old cliché "Buy high, sell low." And also you should avoid bear markets, unless the bears are on sale. But my limited economic knowledge didn't stop me from opening an E-Trade account. Investment tip number one: Don't listen to a talking baby.

Like many people, I have a boring old retirement account. But I decided that I wanted a little more action. I wanted to swim with the big fish in the Dow. I wanted to talk to my friends who work at Fidelity and say things like, "Yeah, I juiced the returns on those futures with some leverage in the Asian derivatives and a hedge on the upper-lower index commodities. Hostile takeovers, ROI." And then they'd say to themselves, "Wow, Ezra is really smart about money stuff," and we'd all remark about how nice Chatham is in the off-season, when all the riffraff is gone.

So last spring I opened my E-Trade account and bought some stock. And not just any stock. Goldman Sachs stock.

Here's my theory: Goldman is the most bloodthirsty, ruthless cesspool of villains on the planet. No matter who loses, Goldman always seems to win. Just about every government regulator who might dare cramp its style either came from Goldman or hopes to get hired by Goldman. In the wake of the 2008 meltdown, we learned that Goldman was gleefully selling products it knew were doomed—nay, products specifically designed to explode and make money for the bettor on the other side. It's not a real feel-good operation, Goldman Sachs.

That's why I bought a few shares. My thinking is that if you can't beat 'em, join 'em. But in the case of Goldman, I joined 'em and they're still beating me. At the moment, the shares are down about a third from when I signed on, and Goldman recently reported its worst quarter in forever. But you know what they say: It's not a loss until you smell. And again, I'm not sure what that means. All I know is that I started with some money and now I have less money, a situation that economists call the Gary Coleman Conundrum.

Perhaps if I hold onto my shares, they'll come back in a year or two. The awesome thing about investing is that you have no idea. And even if you do know what you're doing, you're at the mercy of vast mysterious forces beyond your control. You're at the mercy of history.

For instance, if you saved money your whole life and retired in 1999, you're probably a winner. If you saved your whole life and planned to retire in 2008, then you got crushed. If you sold a house in 2006, you won. If you bought a house in 2006, you lost. And so on. But from my perspective, the arbitrary booms and busts of the modern economic system do have an upside: If you recognize that your financial destiny might be determined by forces beyond your control, then that liberates you to enjoy your money a little more. All the self-help econ gurus who claim that your retirement is riding on whether you buy a cup of coffee each morning are full of crap. Buy your coffee and enjoy it, because your house might be depreciating $500 that day. Or it might be appreciating $1,000. Or Goldman Sachs might be doing something that's going to blow up the financial system and cause your carefully accrued investments to decline by half. So just chill out about the coffee.

Back around 2001, there was a chart next to The Improper watercooler that espoused the virtues of compound interest and stated something like, "If you invest $20 per week, by the time you're 50 you'll be flying your Gucci helicopter to your solid-gold yacht." And that chart always made me feel guilty, because at the time I was heavily investing in drinks at the Alley and ill-advised, late-night meals in Chinatown.

As luck would have it, I wasn't missing anything in the years I was absent from the stock market. So perhaps going forward, I'll blend my new investment strategy with my carpe diem old one. I'll hedge my Goldman stake with actual steak. The stock market goes up and down, but you can't go wrong with a nice rib eye. ✖✖✖

GOODBYE, THEO. HELLO, NBA?

5 FALL STORYLINES

The Wrigley Retreat I'm sorry to see Theo Epstein go. I understand why he did, and I don't think the Sox are screwed without him, but it won't be the same. Some people see that as a good thing, but not me. Theo's still only 37. He's not done winning titles. Meanwhile, did you notice Larry Lucchino's shit-eating grin during Ben Cherington's first presser? His happiness is terrifying.

John Lackey, Meet Tommy John We knew that one way or another Lackey wasn't pitching for the Sox next season, but Tommy John surgery? Eh, I'll take it. I still wish they'd traded him, completely ridding his presence/spirit/stench from the clubhouse. I just can't wait for his first post-op interview: "Yeah, you know, I'm glad it's over, but the surgery wasn't that great. Worst Tommy John surgery I've ever had..."

The Cup Hangover The Bruins slow start isn't entirely surprising, but it's time to wake up. Eighteen goals over their first eight games? Where are we, 2009? The good news is that, unlike two years ago, we know the talent is there. But what happened to the chemistry? If I'm Claude Julien, I'm getting the team together for one more rager. Everyone must black out! See if that can't recapture a little Stanley Cup magic.

So You're Saying There's a Chance As I type, the NBA players and owners are hunkered down for their latest marathon bargaining session. It's too early to tell if there will be basketball this fall, but more importantly, there's finally reason to believe the season will be saved. Unless you're a Minnesota Timberwolves fan, in which case every year's a bit of a wash.

Waiting for the Real Thing Heading to their Week 8 date in Pittsburgh, the Patriots have the best record in the AFC and the second best record in the entire league. So why aren't we more excited? No question, it's a direct result of last year's disaster. If the regular season were all that mattered, the Pats would have at least two more rings.

Seguin: Brian Babineau

ONE BONUS SOX PREDICTION

This one doesn't kick in until NEXT off-season, but I wanted to get it out there now: Jacoby Ellsbury will sign with the Cubs. Doesn't that make perfect sense? I can already see him and Theo at the press conference—while Lucchino sits at home swearing into his Rem-Dawg coffee mug.

4 DATES TO WATCH

11/4: Vince Wilfork turns 30, but amazingly, he still doesn't look a day under 300 pounds.

11/6: The Pats host the Giants in a rematch of Super Bowl XLII. Or, if you prefer (and I do), a rematch of preseason: Week 4.

11/7: The Bruins take on the Islanders in the first of a five-game home stand. (Each to be followed by a five-minute Marchand keg stand.)

11/15: MLB announces this year's AL Cy Young. Here's my ballot: 1. Justin Verlander; 2. CC Sabathia; 3. Jered Weaver; 4,000. John Lackey.

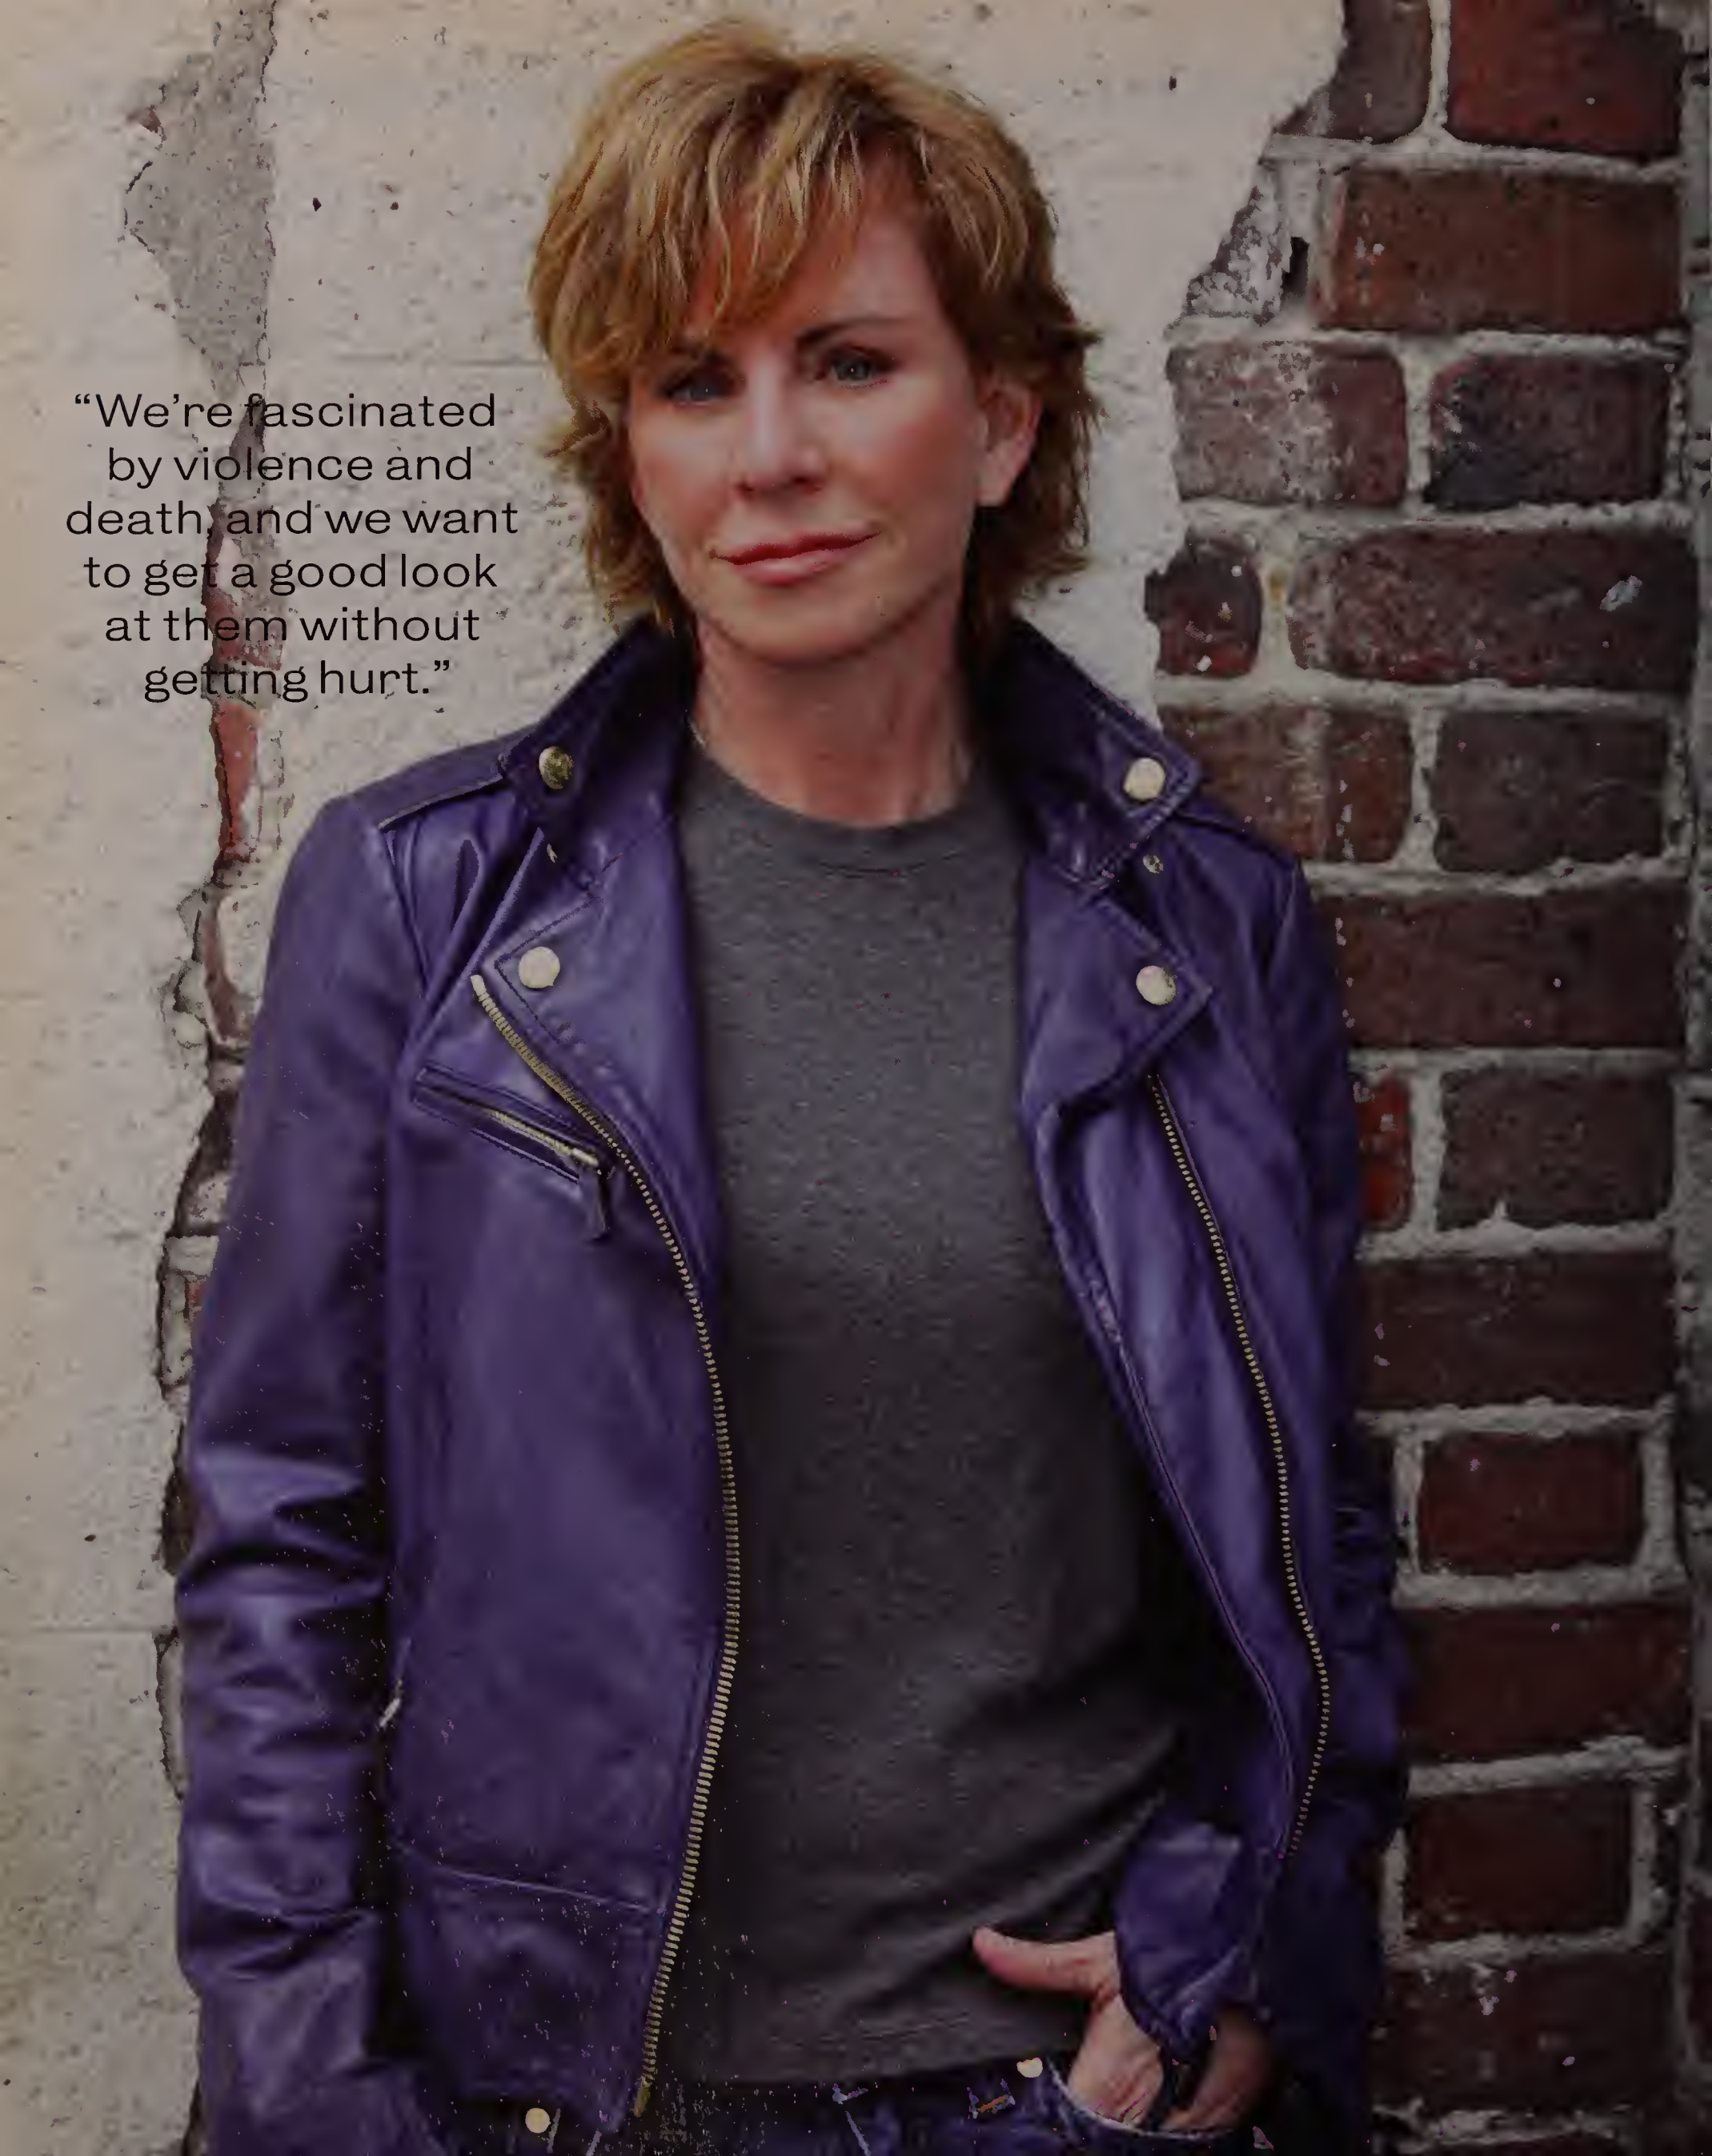
SEND FEEDBACK TO RICH@IMPROPER.COM AND READ MORE AT CSNNE.COM.

2 SCANDALOUS THOUGHTS

OMG, Beer AND Fried Chicken?! Do you really think that the Sox should ban beer from the clubhouse? You really think that's going to make a difference? Come on, just tell Beckett to stop being a punk, and let everyone go about their business.

Pats to Pornhub This one wasn't as bad, but the craziness over Rob Gronkowski's picture with pornstar BiBi Jones was still a little ridiculous. Should he have kept the jersey out of the picture? Yeah, sure. But for all I care, Gronk can take a second job driving the Bang Bus. Keep catching touchdowns and we're good.

3 OFF-SEASON SOX PREDICTIONS



The Daddy Mackanin You already know my choice for Red Sox manager. That's right, Johnny Pesky. But realistically, I'm guessing the job goes to 60-year-old Phillies bench coach Pete Mackanin. He's been in the game forever, has experience in a high-pressure market and will bring an old-school vibe to a clubhouse that could use it. Although, if they want old school, who's better than Johnny P? The man homered off Bob Feller for crying out loud!

Papi in Pinstripes The Sox are riding this "don't pay for past performance" train right into the off-season, and David Ortiz is caught on the tracks. So when the Sox lowball Big Papi, I bet he bounces to the Bronx. At which point, we better put Wally on suicide watch. (Hmm, or maybe we shouldn't.)

And the Closer? During his introductory press conference, Ben Cherington hinted that there are other guys in the bull pen capable of closing, which leads me to believe that Jonathan Papelbon's Fenway days are numbered. On a related note: You know who's looking for a closer this winter? Mr. Theo Epstein and the Cubs. If Carmine allows it, don't be surprised…

Soroff On PATRICIA CORNWELL

The crime writer tells us about helicopters, tattoos and Jack the Ripper.

ONE OF THE BEST-SELLING CRIME WRITERS OF ALL TIME, Patricia Cornwell, 55, was born in Miami and raised in North Carolina. After covering the police beat at The Charlotte Observer, she worked in the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner in Richmond, Va., during which time she published her first novel, Postmortem, which won a slew of accolades. She has written a series of best sellers starring her heroine, Kay Scarpetta, in addition to other novels, a biography, two cookbooks, a children's book and a nonfiction work about the identity of Jack the Ripper. Her numerous awards include the French Legion of Honor. Cornwell cofounded the National Forensic Academy and created a chair in inorganic science at Harvard. Her newest book, Red Mist, will be released Dec. 6. She lives with her wife in Boston.

Jonathan Soroff: Grossest thing you ever saw at the coroner's office?
Patricia Cornwell: I remember being taken to a barbeque restaurant after a visit to the body farm, and I was served rice. I had to tell people I was allergic to it because there was no way I was going touch it.

How did you come up with the name Scarpetta?
It's kind of quirky. My ex-husband, Charlie, used to tell me really zany stories about a landlady he had when he was in grad school, and her last name was Scarpetta. I just thought it was such a cool name, so I used it.

What qualities do you share with your heroine?
We tend to have the same politics, sensibilities and philosophies. She's got a very strong belief in human and civil rights. I couldn't actually live with a main character who was tremendously different from me.

How do you research for writing procedurals?
In one of my earlier books, I wanted to test something about tattoos, so I bought a roaster turkey and took it to a tattoo parlor. We spent two days there, and the turkey wasn't in very good shape by the time we were done.

What's your fixation with Jack the Ripper?
I was in London with a top investigator at Scotland Yard who knew as much as anyone about the case. He told me there were hundreds of letters that Jack the Ripper had written to the police and the media, and so I went and looked at the originals.

Why the shift in tense and perspective in the Scarpetta novels?
The first 10 years were from a first-person point of view, and by that point I felt very confined being in her skull. I wanted to be able to explore the characters better, and broaden my own range. The switch to an omniscient point of view might've had something to do with writing the Jack the Ripper book. But now that I've been in all the other characters' heads, I've gone back to Kay's. It feels like going home.

Ever creep yourself out writing?
Oh, yeah. When I was writing Book of the Dead, it had some really gross scenes of the bad guy cooking certain types of meat on his grill. I looked down at my roast beef sandwich, and I've never eaten rare roast beef again.

Where do these dark things come from?
They're a part of life. Everyone is fascinated by it. Just look how slow traffic goes past a bad car wreck, or how many people line up to look at the big, bad shark in the aquarium. We're fascinated by violence and death, and we want to get a good look at them without getting hurt. It's just human nature.

Do you watch shows like CSI and Law & Order?
Not really. A lot of these forensic shows have nothing to do with the way these things are really done. The one show I do watch that might surprise people to know is Dexter.

Is writing about dark subjects therapeutic?
It is. Taking something that's really irrational, random and ugly, and turning it into something organized and a form of art. I may have created Scarpetta and her world, but in a way, Scarpetta and those characters created me.

Agatha Christie or Sir Arthur Conan Doyle?
I'd probably say Arthur Conan Doyle because he changed crime writing forever. Agatha Christie is a great puzzle creator. She's almost like a mathematician. She probably would've invented the Rubik's Cube if she didn't write books. But Arthur Conan Doyle changed the whole game.

Do you read a lot of crime fiction?
No. This may shock you, but when I started to write crime novels, I'd never read a single murder mystery in my life. I approached it as a journalist. I was a nonfiction writer, and I took a nonfiction approach. I did go to a bookstore and buy three murder mysteries—Agatha Christie, Dorothy Sayers and I think P.D. James. That wasn't so helpful, because the conventions of the genre didn't work, so it took me a number of books before I created my own thing, which I guess you'd call "forensic thriller."

Is truth really stranger than fiction?
Absolutely. Things have happened to me that if I wrote, nobody would believe. Just think of the names people have. A guy gets arrested for cattle rustling and the name of the judge is Bovine? And how many Detective Slaughters have we seen? Or Detective Gore?

Do you invent the crime or the solution first?
Always the crime. I never know how they're going to end. It's the body first, actually, because you don't even know if it's a crime. Then you don't know what kind of crime, and sure as heck not why or who. So I work it pretty much the way you'd work a case. It can actually cause a lot of anxiety.

What's your biggest extravagance?
I have to be really efficient with my time, so often flying commercially isn't feasible, and I also pilot my own helicopter, which is useful for doing research. I can fly into places, find out what I need and get back. I guess having your own helicopter's a big extravagance.

Do you have any writing superstitions?
I very much believe that when I get up from my work, it's really important not to talk about it with other people and not to think about it. You need to leave it alone.

Can I ride in your helicopter?
Absolutely! I just can't promise where we'll end up. ✖✖✖

"I KNOW MY STORY IS UNIQUE."

MAKING HISTORY

THE REMARKABLE HOCKEY ODYSSEY OF TIM THOMAS

BY MICHAEL HOLLEY

A FEW TIMES ON HIS HOCKEY JOURNEY, when exasperation and thoughts of, "What do I have to do to catch a break?" crept into his head, Tim Thomas allowed himself to imagine the career that could've been. He minored in history at the University of Vermont, and there were moments when he wondered if he'd spend his 30s as a teacher.

After all, he was the kid with the thoroughly American story that no one in America seemed to notice. At least not the people who put together hockey teams. It didn't seem to matter that he possessed all the Midwestern toughness of Flint, Mich., the city he grew up near. His dad sold cars, and when there were no cars for him to sell, he opened a fruit stand and his son chipped in by selling apples. It didn't seem to matter that he had played brilliantly at UVM, compiling the most saves in school history and leading the Catamounts to the national semifinals, an elite stage they had never seen before.

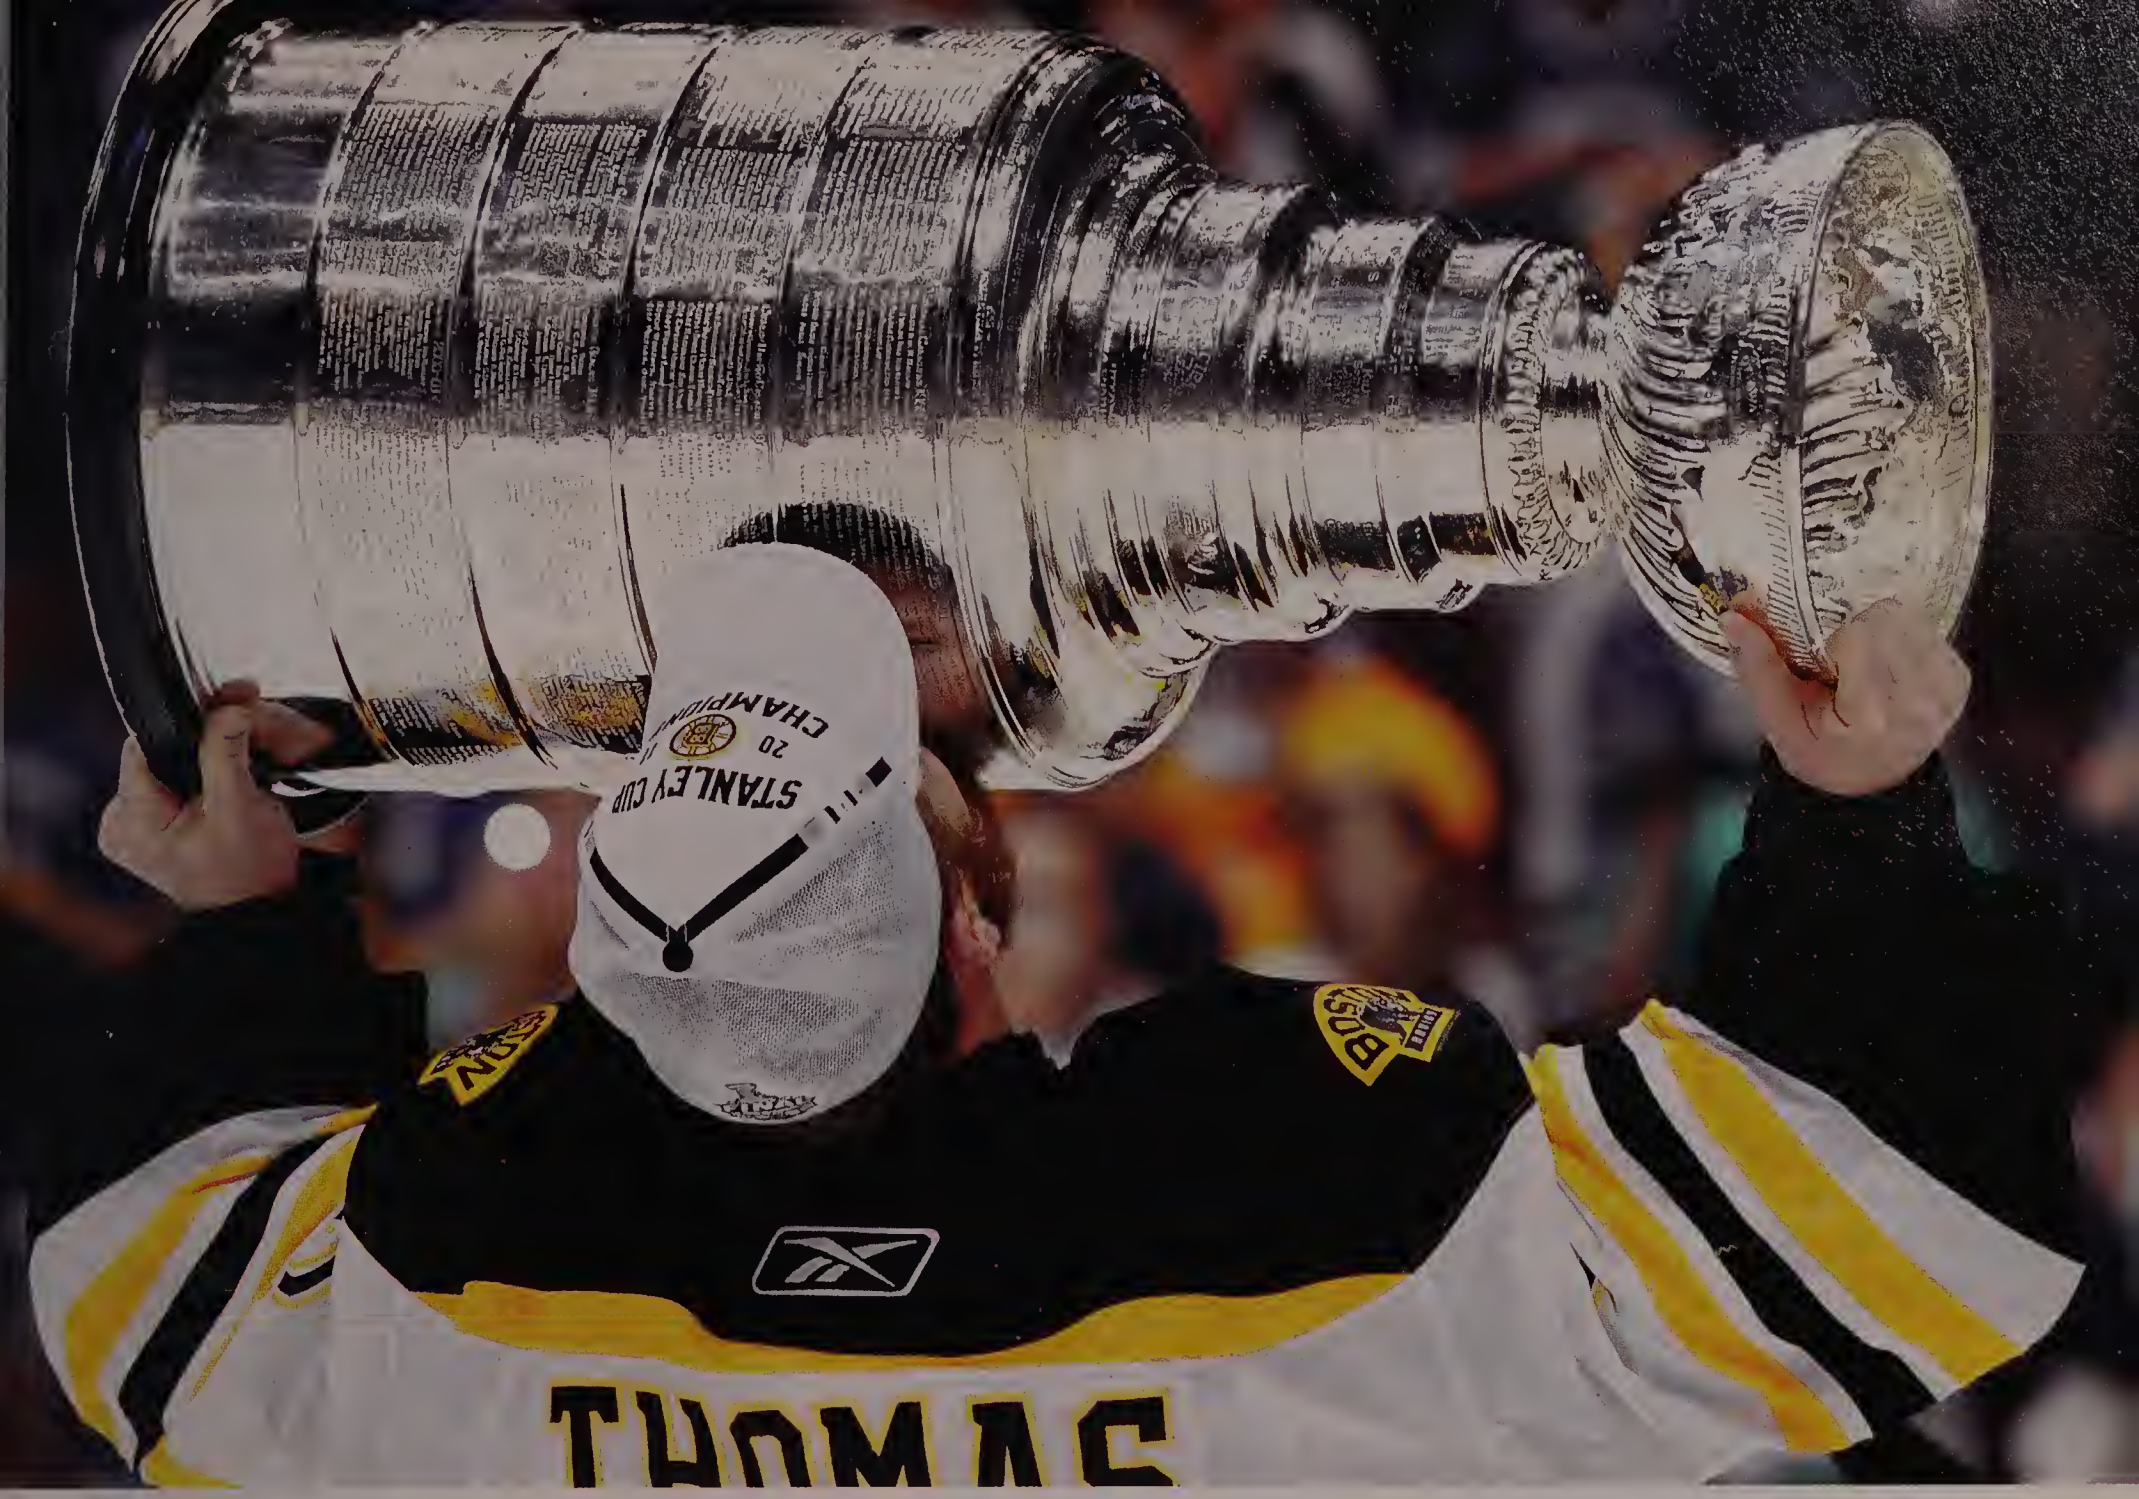
Whether the team-builders were in the United States or Canada, they didn't quite understand Thomas the way Europeans did. He dominated the North American minors and pro leagues in Finland and Sweden. But there was something about Thomas' style—indefinable and unconventional—that the National Hockey League didn't fully trust. He was good enough to be drafted by and affiliated with NHL teams, but when they were looking for "The Guy," they never felt that he was the right choice.

Thomas was always a history buff, from his curiosity about the rise and fall of Rome to the details of the American Revolution. Ultimately, it was his appreciation of history that kept him on a path toward the NHL and not the classroom.

"I know my story is unique, but I'm not the first guy to get a late start in his NHL career," he says. "Johnny Bower played forever in the minors and [became a starter in the] NHL when he was 34. He played until he was 45, and he's in the Hall of Fame. And then there's someone like Rick Knickle, who played for the longest time in the minors and didn't make it in the NHL until he was 33. Those were the stories I looked toward when I wasn't in the NHL."

The official record says Thomas made it at 28, in 2002, when he debuted with the Bruins. He appeared in four games and won three of them. But the B's didn't know what they had, sent him back to the minors in Providence, and put that season in the gloves of men who are now trivia answers during drinking games. (Remember Steve Shields? Jeff Hackett? John Grahame?)

The next year, Andrew Raycroft was the name that kept Thomas in the minors. And the year after that, following the 2004 playoffs, the league locked out its players. Thomas went to Finland, played goalie as if he invented the position (he had 15 shutouts and an unheard-of save percentage of .947), and returned to the States in 2005, only to begin that season in the minors. Even when he'd play, and start and succeed, the roll call kept coming: Felix Potvin, Manny Fernandez and even his good buddy, the talented Tuukka Rask.



All of it seems absurd today. Last season, Thomas set a league record for highest save percentage. In the postseason, he set Stanley Cup final records for most saves and fewest goals allowed in a seven-game series. He registered seventh-game shutouts in the conference and Stanley Cup finals, a feat that the Bruins' TV play-by-play man, NESN's Jack Edwards, describes as "the equivalent of Don Larsen [who threw a World Series perfect game] and Bob Gibson [who won three Series games against the Red Sox in 1967] combined into one. It's amazing."

THERE'S ALWAYS A NOD TO HISTORY IN WHATEVER THOMAS DOES.

Thomas is the rare athlete in any of the four major American sports leagues to have this type of success story. Usually, you can pick any sport—including hockey—and the top player in it begins as a cosseted teenager. At 28, he's in his prime. By the time he reaches Thomas' age, 37, his career is described as being in its twilight, if not altogether over. The thought of Tom Brady, Dirk Nowitzki or Albert Pujols being relegated to backup/minor-league status in favor of multiple quarterbacks, power forwards and first basemen seems laughable. But that was Thomas' reality as recently as 2009.

"I hope my story gives kids hope. Not just in hockey, but in life," he says. "I'm not saying everyone has the ability to go out there and be a goalie in the NHL. But if there's something you can do and you want to do it, you have to believe you can go out and do whatever you want."

That's one of the messages at the Tim Thomas Hockey Camps, where Thomas teaches young people about his all-inclusive philosophy: "My technique is actually a variety of techniques. My theory of goaltending is to teach kids a variety of them. I recommend they practice all of them and use the one they're most comfortable with. When I was young, I didn't really emulate anyone. Maybe I had a picture in my head of [1980 Olympian] Jim Craig and some of the saves he made, but overall it just came down to what I felt like I did best."

There's always a nod to history in whatever Thomas does. When he talks about his sport, he references the NHL as well as old International Hockey League teams like the Flint Spirits and Flint Generals. Perhaps it's his upbringing or humbling, tireless pursuit to succeed, but he doesn't possess the superstar effect. As New England buzzed about his frequent and dramatic saves on the way to the Stanley Cup, he all but shrugged. It was as if, at all times, he had his eye on a historical example of someone who'd accomplished something bigger.

THE B'S DIDN'T KNOW WHAT THEY HAD.

He had his professorial moments during the finals, too. After the Bruins won the title in Vancouver, they were told to remain in their dressing room longer than usual. Thomas didn't realize why until later: rioters were tearing up the city.

"Come on. People have to understand that it's just a game," he says. "I heard that a guy from Boston was thrown off a bridge during that whole thing. Really? For a game? I get the feeling that the people who started all of that in Vancouver weren't real hockey fans. And maybe those people would've done it no matter what the result of the game had been. They were just looking for an excuse."

Before the looting happened in Canada, Thomas, as usual, remained coolly focused on the game that he knew he could play, even if other people harbored doubts. The Bruins had played three previous finals games in Vancouver without being able to get a win, so a few guys on the team had an idea. They were going to replicate everything Thomas did at home on the road. So they packed the actual toaster in which Thomas heated his pre-game English muffin. They added the same packets of peanut butter and jelly that he used to dress it. They even brought the same plastic knives. The rest of the story is, indeed, history: The Bruins won the game, 4-0, and a man who once thought of teaching history became a part of it forever. ×××

A Life Luxe-Ordinary

BY LINDSEY CANANT ❧ Illustration by Daniel Fishel

ON ANY GIVEN NIGHT, GUESTS PICKED UP in chauffeured cars sleep on sumptuous linens turned down by smiling staff. Fresh flowers stand on the dresser, a plush robe hangs in the closet and expensive soaps precisely aligned on marble countertops foretell an impeccably pressurized shower. Tomorrow, as guests lounge poolside, inhale aromatherapy treatments or slice into seared tuna at the on-site restaurant, housekeeping will restore everything to its proper place. Such is the scene at a high-priced hotel. In Boston. In Shanghai. In Oslo. Anywhere, really. Somewhere amid the designer labels, luxury turned homogenous.

BUT RECENTLY, starched tablecloths began to seem démodé, and fancy started looking stuffy. "Twenty years ago, people felt that dining should be more buttoned up," says chef/restaurateur Frank McClelland. Century-old restaurants Locke-Ober and the Oak Room once led our city down the path to fine dining, sport coats–only dress codes and all. But as those restaurants' demographics climb slowly up in age and the buzz around them dwindles to a whisper, there's a sense that change is in the air. Now, McClelland says, "People are more relaxed with themselves. They're comfortable in their own skin." New England's tastemakers—McClelland among them—are bringing personality back to the art of living well.

On the scene since 1978, his L'Espalier is a go-to spot for snazzy, dress-to-impress occasions. But by 2010, McClelland had witnessed a shift. As diners grew more curious about their food, they took fine dining outside formal rooms. McClelland began hosting seasonal dinners in Essex at Apple Street Farm, the organic farm he established the year prior. Under starry, country skies, attendees dine on freshly harvested summer squash, heirloom tomatoes and farm-fresh eggs.

Theme dinners, like a Cowboy Barbecue or Festival of Tomatoes, marry haute cuisine with unbuttoned environs. Since they occur outside the restaurant, McClelland says, "It's easier to give them a personality. These are one-of-a-kind events. Each one feels like a celebration." Attendees are invited to dress casually, and the multicourse dinners with wine pairings conclude with s'mores served around an open campfire. "The evening has to evolve organically," he says.

At $175 per person, the laid-back meal isn't cheap. And though the concept is simple, McClelland says, "The farm dinners aren't about being practical or making a profit. In fact, the cost to put them on is astronomical. I do them for selfish reasons. Because this is the ideal place to touch, see, partake and be nourished. That kind of exploratory, reflective dining doesn't exist anywhere else." Which is exactly the point. Well-heeled foodies don't want an experience they can find elsewhere. They want a unique evening that reaches them on a level deeper than conspicuous consumption. "Diners understand that this is the source of day-to-day great living," explains McClelland. "This is part of the transition back to what life is really about: breaking bread with friends and family."

To choose between such products is to subjectively judge what's trash and what's treasure. It's intrinsically personal, so the objects tell stories about their owners.

This mix of savviness and desire for the unique has transformed other corners of the luxury market, too. Some of Boston's nattiest dressers are springing for hand-hewn garments. Local designer Sam Mendoza, who's dressed everyone from hip high schoolers to their high-society grandmothers, says his clients share a level of discernment that comes from having experienced the world's finest craftsmanship and quality. But the subject his client knows best is herself. And she's not willing to pay for a pricey outfit unless it reflects something authentic.

"'It' culture has faded away," Mendoza reports. "It's not about dressing like a mannequin. Great style comes from picking pieces that stir up an individual response. Items should get to you from the core." For Mendoza, that means recognizing that every woman's body is different. Garments hanging on the racks in his studio or at Louis Boston are 70 percent finished. Once purchased, he fits every detail to his client, from hems to fastenings to straps.

For consumers with the means to purchase dresses from runway-level brands, it's this level of service that makes all the difference. Plus, the willingness to drop a wad of cash comes easier with the insurance against a fashion doppelgänger, as no two garments are ever the same. Eschewing patterns, Mendoza drapes his raw-edged silks and atypical cuts directly on the body, letting its movement dictate the final product. "Clothing evokes emotion," he explains.

NO JACKET REQUIRED
Fine dining at Apple Street Farm

Emotion is a theme that comes up again and again on this new luxury terrain. Whether he's serving a meal at Apple Street or in his restaurant, McClelland says his goal is "an experience that moves the soul." Under the old regime, human touches—perhaps deemed too risky since what tickles one customer may offend another—were stamped out. Nowadays, people are finding (and marketing) humanity, which means imperfections.

For instance, interior designers, including Jane E. Miller of the South End store J.E.M., have embraced a philosophy of "rough luxe." Miller creates modern, comfortable interiors that incorporate vintage, reclaimed and salvaged finds. But the line between glam and grime is a personal one, and is thus subject to fickle emotions. Take the weathered industrial barrels Miller keeps on the floor of her shop. "They're beautiful," she says, seeing patina in something others might deem plebeian. "Time and industry have left them dented, crumpled. That these once-shiny steel barrels stood the test of time and have become something completely unexpected and beautiful really speaks to our humanity, and that is beautiful too."

ABOUT TIME The Spa at Mandarin Oriental, Boston

Juxtapositions—like those between antique instruments and polished chrome, or between rusted metal and cowhide—energize Miller's spaces. Her ultra-curated inventory is full of bold pieces with playful winks, like necklaces made of vertebrae, an iron bulldog or a candelabra made from salvaged piping. Though many pieces are pricey or one-of-a-kind, items are for touching, smelling and lifting.

To choose between such products is to subjectively judge what's trash and what's treasure. It's intrinsically personal, so the objects tell stories about their owners. Miller works with her clients so that the finished designs construct a narrative about each person's geography, history and experiences. For instance, a vintage botanical diagram might speak to memories of a grandfather's love of gardening, while antlers or driftwood recall a meaningful trek abroad.

In a world of instantly obsolete technology and 24-hour tweeting, the intimacy and paring-down of McClelland's dinners, Mendoza's fittings and Miller's aesthetic seem almost cutting-edge. The same holds for the milieu of beauty and health. Futuristic injectables, depilatories, microlight facial therapies and laser massages are the tools of choice in high-end salons. So it's noticeable, then, when a state-of-the-art spa makes a point of referencing the past.

At the Spa at Mandarin Oriental, Boston, therapists draw on ancient Chinese traditions, guiding energies and treating chakras. Since many guests will have spent the day in time- and space-distorting digital worlds, therapists apply earthy remedies like the New England Retreat, which uses local herbs, plants and botanicals to connect clients to the real, physical world. And rather than specific treatments, guests can book time itself in the form of tailor-made Time Rituals. These combine massages, wraps and other services with free time in relaxation areas, a vitality pool and a crystal steam room. The point is that lingering is the remedy to modernity's woes. Turning off the BlackBerry is a passport to the here-and-now. "Simplicity is the greatest form of luxury when one lives in a world where we are making hundreds of decisions a day," says spa treatment manager Karen Aleksich.

Developer Tim Harrington agrees that slowing down is the ultimate pleasure in today's constantly connected culture. He also believes that luxury should look different in different places. Inspired by his own childhood vacations to New England cottages in the woods, Harrington opened the unconventional Kennebunkport resort, Hidden Pond. Childhood, it turns out, is a happy place trendsetters return to when looking to renew themselves.

"Our guests want to touch back to childhood memories and reflect on a simpler time," he says. "Life is racing by, and time is our most valuable commodity." With a design sensibility rooted in Kennebunkport's geography, Harrington embraced the sensual cues of bygone New England summers—slapping screen doors, the scent of wood, the sensation of climbing on a bicycle and the all-too-rare sound of silence—and added luxury elements only insofar as it enhanced them.

"The very first word in any sentence defining luxury should be 'comfort,'" Harrington says. "We need to realize we're in the entertainment business." Staff provide top-notch service but don't take themselves too seriously. "Guests should feel like they're playing house in their very comfortable home. With maid service," he adds.

The resort elevates the mundane to something special. Rocks and branches make for art. A shed is a special dining venue. A '56 Ford station wagon becomes a chariot. Because of that, it's probably unsurprising that Hidden Pond is the site where Ken Oringer grows produce for a gourmet restaurant, Earth, the well-heeled dress to decompress, flea-market finds decorate one-of-a-kind (and state-of-the-art) guest cottages and natural beauty treatments are performed in a tree house. It's a blueprint for the new luxury.

For those with the means, there's no more tiptoeing through the good life. It's about staying grounded. Mendoza sums it up best: "This isn't about perfection or glossiness. It's about intensity and authenticity on a human level. A lifestyle that's about joy. There may just be the slightest detail that's 'off.' But it's there, and it's real and you can feel its energy." ×××

TASTING NOTES

IF MUSIC BE THE FOOD OF love, rock on. Such is the animating spirit behind Eat Your Heart Out Boston, a benefit in which local chefs concoct music-inspired dishes to raise money for Zumix and Future Chefs. Bathed in the scarlet lights of the stage at Paradise Rock Club, more than a baker's dozen of Boston's top kitchens—including Island Creek Oysters, Toro and Hungry Mother—dish up treats to a soundtrack from local indie-folk band Kingsley Flood and rock-infused R&B outfit Jenny Dee & the Deelinquents. Past evenings have tempted some chefs to trade their kitchen knives for microphones (see Will Gilson, above), so be braced for impromptu jam sessions. KATHLEEN GODFREY

Movies Edited by Kyle Wright

Capsules by Sean Burns

Contagion ★★ ½ Working once again in grand canvas Traffic mode, director Steven Soderbergh's chilling pandemic procedural follows a killer strain of the flu from Gwyneth Paltrow's hacking cough to the far corners of the globe, leaving 12 million people and dozens of Academy Award winners dead in its wake. Soderbergh is a model craftsman fascinated by process, but sometimes he can be a bit too clinical and bloodless for his own good. Ironically, what makes Contagion so effective also turns out to be its undoing, as the movie's stubborn refusal to provide conventional Hollywood payoffs makes it easy to respect and difficult to love. Matt Damon provides the few moments of emotional ballast as a suddenly single dad functioning as our audience surrogate. The first 40 minutes are exceptional, but as the disease spreads, the screenplay stretches itself too thin over too many characters and storylines. It's an expertly mounted, emotionally remote film. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Drive ★★★★ Played by Ryan Gosling in a silk scorpion jacket and an omnipresent toothpick, the nameless lead is a Hollywood stunt-driver moonlighting as a robbery wheelman. He's an absurd, larger-than-life archetype, and the giddy pleasure of director Nicholas Winding Refn's entertaining Drive is how in love with its very "movie-ness" this movie is. Set in the present day, yet pulsating with a distinctly 1980s glow, it's a boilerplate genre picture where every shot seems designed to make you nod your head appreciatively and mutter the word "awesome." There's a bag of money and some guns, plus one genuinely terrifying turn by (of all people) Albert Brooks as a quick-tempered gangster. It's romantic, in all definitions of the word, positioning performers as icons in front of expansive Los Angeles landscapes, with Gosling emerging as a Tiger Beat Steve McQueen. OK, so it's a bit self-conscious. But Drive is pulp delirium. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

50/50 ★★★ The prospect of dying young is no laughing matter, but in the case of 50/50, it makes for an extremely awkward, heartfelt and funny film. Directed by Jonathan Levine and written by Will Reiser, it has the rough sting of real life at its (slightly compromised) core. Reiser was diagnosed with a rare form of cancer in his early 20s. His loyal best friend during the ordeal was the kind of slovenly loudmouth usually played in movies by Seth Rogen. Except Reiser's best friend really is Seth Rogen, who always seems to turn up in movies as a variation of himself anyway. Joseph Gordon-Levitt stars here, and 50/50 is great at letting him and the other up-and-coming movie stars in the cast play to their strengths. The movie gets better as it goes along. "Did you ever see Terms of Endearment?" Gordon-Levitt asks at one point. The shaggy, laughing-through-the-tears M.O. of James L. Brooks' cable classic is obviously what 50/50 is striving for. Half the time it even gets there. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Footloose ★★ You're probably wondering, "Why?" The answer is beside the point if you find yourself in line for director Craig Brewer's exuberant rehash of the silly 1984 musical. Original screenwriter Dean Pitchford is credited here, presumably because nobody even bothered changing most of the dialogue. It's the same movie with better dancing and worse acting. Much worse. Local boy Kenny Wormald stars as Ren McCormack, an out-of-town troublemaker new to the stuffy town of Bomont, where teenage dancing is a crime. Dennis Quaid takes over John Lithgow's role as the over-protective pastor, but how I wish they could've persuaded Kevin Bacon to take the part. Dancing With the Stars' Julianne Hough, who doesn't look a day under 30, plays the preacher's rebellious teenage daughter, and, once again, we spend a lot of time worrying about whether or not these kids will be allowed to have a prom. Mysteriously time-warped with popped collars and skinny ties, it's high energy, low-impact fluff. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Guard ★★★ ½ Suffused with a strain of romantic Irish fatalism, writer/director John Michael McDonagh's debut plunders the clichés of a thousand interracial buddy-cop comedies, emerging with an ode to shabby nobility that's stranger and sadder than expected. It's also Elizabeth Olsen shines in this dark and twisted tale.

Martha Marcy May Marlene ★★★★
Starring Elizabeth Olsen, Sarah Paulson, John Hawkes, Hugh Dancy and Brady Corbet. Written and directed by Sean Durkin. At Kendall Square Cinema and Waltham Embassy.

THE TITLE IS A MOUTHFUL. Even people I know who love this film can't seem to remember what it's called.

But then, that's kind of the point. Writer/director Sean Durkin's astonishing debut is all about a loss of identity and that slippery slope between the past and the present. It's impossible to know what in this film even takes place in "the real world" and what is just a dream, or, more likely, a nightmare.

Played by the unknown Elizabeth Olsen (yes, kid sister to those odious twins), Martha is first glimpsed fleeing from a cult compound deep in the deceptively soothing woods of the Catskills. She makes a phone call in panicked desperation to her estranged sister Lucy (Sarah Paulson), but right away we can tell that something isn't right.

In the style of vintage Polanski, Durkin's swaggeringly confident film uses long takes and tension within compositions to conjure a consuming sense of unease. There's something off about the camera angles and the space between these characters. The lack of visual balance means that nothing in this picture ever feels quite right.

Information is parceled out slowly, cutting to flashbacks on matching movements, which blurs the sense of reality. It isn't long before we begin to fill in the blanks with young, lonely Martha as she's indoctrinated into a free-loving, Manson-esque cult somewhere in the boonies. A disturbingly charismatic John Hawkes, fresh from an astounding performance in Winter's Bone, works a strain of backwoods malevolence, as this seemingly gentle farm commune obviously provides Martha with a kinship lacking in her family life.

Hawkes isn't just her absent father; he's also her sole voice of support. He rechristens Martha as "Marcy May," undermining any sense of personal agency she might've had upon arrival. Seldom has on-screen brainwashing been depicted so subtly or in such an unnervingly matter-of-fact way.

Contrast these creepy but halcyon days on the broken-down farm with Martha's present-day, strained relationship with Lucy. Staying in an opulent Connecticut lake house, Martha and her sister tear open old wounds, their every interaction somehow ending in spiteful outbursts, despite beginning with the best of intentions.

Seldom has on-screen brainwashing been depicted so subtly or in such an unnervingly matter-of-fact way.

To the increasing chagrin of Lucy's fiancé (Hugh Dancy), this troublesome, unexpected sibling is suddenly, erratically, firing on half her cylinders. Martha arrives in Connecticut having lost any concept of privacy or personal space. She strips down naked, periodically soils herself and, at odd times, is inexplicably unable to navigate any social codes of normal human behavior.

When you've had time to walk around and shake off this movie's unique spell, it's easier to see the causes and effects at play. Martha never had much of a chance from the start, and her fractured family life makes her a prime victim for silky predators. The scope of this particular cult's misdeeds is, like everything else in Martha Marcy May Marlene, only gradually revealed, but eventually we realize why she lives in such mortal terror.

Durkin, still only in his 20s, exhibits an astounding command of cinematic grammar. There are no cheap tricks or scares. It's all classical, old-fashioned camera technique. His cinematographer, Jody Lee Lipes, also shot Lena Dunham's beguiling Tiny Furniture, which held similarly still frames for an effect as sublimely comic as Martha's is disquieting. In an age when nearly every indie movie uses poorly imagined handheld camerawork as a shortcut to bogus authenticity, this young cinematographer's commitment to framing and composition deserves to be heralded.

There's a recurring visual motif of picture windows. In Durkin's hands, these shots of postcard friendly nature feel weirdly sinister. There is a constant sense of exposure, with tantalizing glimpses of folks not looking out of these windows, but peering in.

We remain in Martha's waking nightmare throughout the entire running time. Olsen is fearless in plumbing the character's shape-shifting dismay, floundering when trying to regain a sense of self that perhaps was never there in the first place. To the deafening outrage of a preview audience, Durkin daringly ends the film without any hint of closure or catharsis. We're left stranded between identities, trapped in the tragic limbo of a doomed girl with too many names, and no idea what any of them stand for. ✖✖✖ fookin' hilarious—or at least that's how Sergeant Gerry Boyle might describe it. Played by Brendan Gleeson in one of the great performances of his career. Boyle's a steely-eyed lout, whiling away the hours in a state of perpetual boredom and wasted disappointment, punctuated by occasional visits from Dublin prostitutes. But when a gang of English cocaine traffickers arrive in town, so does a smooth-talking Southern dandy from the FBI (Don Cheadle, master of the reaction shot). Turns out that, like a plus-sized version of every great Humphrey Bogart and Clint Eastwood character, there's a strict moral code lurking somewhere beneath Boyle's anti-social dissolution. The Guard is raw, profane and strangely moving. (At Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

The Help ★★ This surprise smash is being enjoyed by an audience that has gone sadly underserved by the months-long barrage of superheroes and giant robots that typically define summer entertainment. On one hand, we should rejoice, as this is a female-driven picture with no special effects. But it's a troubling film all the same. Based on Kathryn Stockett's best seller, The Help takes place in Jackson, Miss., circa 1962, when audience surrogate Skeeter Phelan (Emma Stone) returns home to her family's plantation and has an ideological falling-out with her well-to-do childhood friends over their nasty racist behavior. The slightly icky wish-fulfillment fantasy

Kate the Great

Cut Me Some Slacks Dubbed "box office poison" for her eccentricity, independence and gender-threatening legwear, Katharine Hepburn hip-checked Hollywood conventionality during its male-dominated Golden Age. ArtsEmerson's Kate the Iconoclast/Katharine the Icon series has uncovered many gems, but its Nov. 5–6 screenings of Woman of the Year take top honors. The trailblazer stars as a feminist in the throes of a not-so-fairy-tale love affair with a coworker, played by Hepburn's real-life lover, Spencer Tracy. It's art imitating life in the most iconic way possible. Maya Phillips allows white audiences to rally around Skeeter's do-gooder activism while rendering her peers as cartoon monsters. It's a very pleasant lie, sending you out of the cinema on a high note. But what vexes me is why the lie even needed to be told in the first place. Aren't there enough true stories of heroism from the civil rights era? Is it really appropriate for us to all stand and applaud this courageous, fictional white girl? (In the suburbs.)

The Ides of March ★★★ Adapted by George Clooney, Grant Heslov and Beau Willimon from Willimon's off-Broadway play, The Ides of March stars Ryan Gosling as a suave Washington, D.C., up-and-comer working on a hotly contested primary campaign for Clooney's too-good-to-be-true contender. Solid, if a little stuffy, the film works best when it sticks with the day-to-day grind of a life in politics: stump speeches, poll numbers, TV spots and the right way to spin a story. Playing the Democratic wet dream of a candidate, Clooney can't resist laying out his own personal talking points on a variety of current issues. (I'd probably vote for him.) So why is this finely crafted, well-acted movie almost impossible to get excited about? For starters, the idea of corruption in politics is no great shakes. But I also think Clooney's clipped professionalism behind the camera might be to blame. The scene work is tight, concise and fully functional. Lean and no-nonsense, even during the more lurid second half, it ultimately feels smaller than it should. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Like Crazy ★ There's an oft-quoted axiom I wish more young writers would heed: Just because it happened to you, doesn't make it interesting. Director Drake Doremus' semi-autobiographical tale of young lovers torn apart by immigration laws is as excruciating to sit through as anything I've seen this year. Anton Yelchin and Felicity Jones star as two dull college kids who fall in love during a bunch of montages and never come up with anything to say to each other. He designs furniture and has a thing about chairs. She's British. There endeth the character development. She stupidly overstays her visa, and then is shocked to find that this presents a problem when she attempts to return. Instead of doing anything sensible like allowing her rich family to intervene, the two instead mope on separate continents, texting each other while listening to sad music. The shockingly poor digital photography looks like it was shot on a 15-year-old camcorder, and I can't for the life of me figure out how this got released. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punch line comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Moneyball ★★★ ½ Brad Pitt finally surrenders and turns in the kind of megawatt movie-star performance we've all been waiting for. As a pal noted, "He's playing the role exactly the way Robert Redford would've in the 1970s." Based on Michael Lewis' best seller, Moneyball stars Pitt as Oakland A's general manager Billy Beane, a once-promising player who washed out young. Now he's stuck trying to run a financially crippled franchise in a league where the big teams have gotten so rich that the smaller markets have been priced right out of the competition. All this inside-baseball talk is served up for your consideration by screenwriter Aaron Sorkin, who puts his trademark rapid-fire banter in the service of surprisingly sturdy and traditional underdog-sports-movie formulas. When it's at its best, Moneyball is preposterously entertaining, as Beane and partner in crime Peter Brand (Jonah Hill) hustle sports agents, owners and rival GMs. It's a movie about the game of baseball that contains surprisingly little actual baseball. It's more like The Bad News Bears with an economics degree. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Real Steel ★ I'm not sure which poor life decisions led to, at 36 years of age, watching a robot fight a cow. Whatever they were, it's obviously time to rethink them. Such is the quandary of Real Steel, yet another film illustrating just how dull it can be watching giant computer-generated androids pounding the crap out of each other. Set in an unspecified future when robot boxing is the most popular sport in America, the film stars Hugh Jackman as a grizzled ex-fighter suddenly stuck with custody of his estranged 11-year-old son (Dakota Goyo, a graduate from the Jake Lloyd School of Child Acting). Would you be shocked if I told you that the kid helps Jackman turn his life around and finally become a decent dad? Can the underdog get a shot at the title? More importantly, will there be a single scene in this movie that isn't agonizingly predictable? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Skin I Live In ★★ ½ After floundering in recent years with sentimental Oscar bait, Pedro Almodóvar's cheerful return to perversity reunites him with his 1990s muse, Antonio Banderas. Here Banderas delivers a shocker of a performance as a vindictive plastic surgeon haunted by a laundry list of past tragedies that pile up in a telenovela fashion. Ingeniously employing a flashback structure that eliminates any possible critique without giving away the movie's most shocking secrets, it's only safe to reveal that Banderas' surgeon has been perfecting genetically engineered replacement skin with an unwilling human guinea pig locked in his elaborate home laboratory. There's some audacious messing with gender roles, and as usual, Almodóvar reels in a metric ton of winking classic film references, calling out everything from Franju's Eyes Without a Face to Hitchcock's Vertigo. The problem is the leaden pacing. Material this outré demands a dizzy, headlong pace, yet the director remains curiously detached and slowpokey. Twenty minutes tighter and this might've been something amazing. (At Kendall Square.)

Take Shelter ★★ ½ There's such an implicit threat of violence inside Michael Shannon, the question is never if he's going to explode, but when. His innate instability is the selling point of Take Shelter, Shannon's second collaboration with his Shotgun Stories writer/director Jeff Nichols. He's a good-hearted Midwestern laborer, haunted by terrifying apocalyptic dreams. Is he a doomsday prophet, or just losing his marbles? As the visions grow more intense, Shannon's diligent working man pours all his time and money into building a massive tornado shelter in the family's backyard. But will his urgent desire to protect his family also turn out to be their undoing? Shannon's night terrors can easily be read as a manifestation of that free-floating dread that has overtaken the country in recent years. Something terrible feels like it's just around the corner, even if we don't yet know what it is. The kind of film that's more exciting to talk about afterward than it is to actually sit through, it's a grindingly slow crawl toward ruin. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

What's Your Number? ★ ½ This abysmal exercise in female self-hatred squanders the talents of Anna Faris, a screwball comedian born 50 years too late and tragically incapable of landing a role in a decent picture. Faris stars as a scatterbrained 20-something who takes a fluffy article in a women's magazine too seriously. Improbably convinced that she's already bedded the maximum number of men deemed acceptable by society before spinsterhood becomes inevitable, Faris begins combing through her exes hoping that one of these frogs might be a prince. Assisting her on this quest is her proudly promiscuous neighbor (played by Captain America himself, Chris Evans). They have terrific chemistry, making the rom-com rigging and idiotic plot devices all the more insufferable. Shot locally a couple years back, you'll be distracted wondering how quickly she can walk from State Street to Porter Square. Any movie in which Faris plays basketball at the Garden in her underwear can't be all bad, but it's close. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

SOUL SUPERNOVA

Fitz & the Tantrums modernize Motown and find breakout stardom.

Fitz & the Tantrums play at House of Blues on Nov. 11.

FITZ & THE TANTRUMS have blown up this year with their ecstatic retro-soul. But frontman Michael Fitzpatrick, also known as Fitz, distinctly recalls his L.A. group's last Boston visit, a June concert at a packed-to-the-gills Paradise Rock Club.

"It was just an amazing show," says Fitzpatrick. "The crowd was more into it than we've ever experienced, to the point where people were screaming so loud that it was almost making our ears bleed." It was a sign that Fitz & the Tantrums were ready for a bigger space. On Nov. 11, the band gets its chance at House of Blues.

The band came about from inspiration born of pain. Reeling from a bad breakup, Fitzpatrick received a fortuitous voicemail from his ex-girlfriend saying her neighbor was dumping a vintage organ for $50. He pounced on it, finding movers to get the heavy instrument into his living room. That night, he used it to write "Breakin' the Chains of Love."

"I was having an almost out-of-body experience," Fitzpatrick recalls. "Music literally saves and heals me, and gets me through these hard periods... I didn't have any intention of starting a band. I just needed not to lose my friggin' mind."

A band began to come together with the help of saxophonist friend James King. The duo assembled a soul-savvy outfit with keyboardist Jeremy Ruzumna (ex-musical director for Macy Gray), bassist Ethan Phillips (since replaced by Joseph Karnes), drummer John Wicks and singer Noelle Scaggs, Fitzpatrick's fiery female foil.

"Before this band, my experience had always felt like trying to shove a square peg through a round hole," says Fitzpatrick. "With this band, from the very beginning, even the first show, we got this different type of energy."

That mojo carried through on their 2009 EP, Songs for a Breakup, Vol. 1, recorded in Fitzpatrick's living room. The EP even made

> "Music saves and heals me. I didn't have any intention of starting a band. I just needed not to lose my friggin' mind."

its way to Adam Levine through his New York tattoo artist. "Adam hears it, flips out for it, and a week later, we're opening for Maroon 5 on their college tour," Fitzpatrick says. "These crazy moments kept propelling us forward and telling us all in the band that we had to pursue this."

Fitz & the Tantrums' 2010 debut album, Pickin' Up the Pieces, propelled them onto the national scene with performances on late-night TV and a turn on Daryl Hall's web show "Live From Daryl's House."

The act's forward progression was driven in part by its references to the past. Fitzpatrick has sometimes been compared to Hall, frontman of the '80s band Hall and Oates. Fitzpatrick remembers, "[Hall's] mom says, 'Fitz, come here' and she waves me over," he recalls, "and she said, 'You sound just like my son.' Can I get a witness? 'Cause Mama Hall just said so!"

Hall and Oates' soul-pop reign peaked before Fitzpatrick, 39, attended an L.A. performing arts high school. "Guys were shaving their beards and singing like Luther Vandross in the 10th grade, and I was this skinny white kid with a voice that was still cracking. It took me a long time to build up the confidence to sing in a style that I've always loved."

He fell early for Motown soul although his parents favored opera and classical music. "The only time I could listen to something else was driving to school in the morning, when I could turn on the oldies station," he says. "I could sing to those songs and feel like I was a backup singer."

Today his act is eclipsing Sharon Jones & the Dap Kings and Mayer Hawthorne in the soul sweepstakes, and his aesthetic nods to Motown's female artists.

"Because I was going through a bad breakup, I wanted to sort of make a male heartbreak album that lyrically would have come from the female side back in the day," he says, noting the band's demographic favors men aged 25-35. "To see dudes in the audience singing crazy, passionate about these breakup songs, it's kind of cool. It's like the male 'R-E-S-P-E-C-T.' They're working it out." ✖✖✖

T'd Off

Roadtrip Romeo The newest album by Mat Kearney, aptly named Young Love, has all the sweetness and excitement of a blossoming romance. Known mostly as a soundtrack sultan, Kearney's catchy hooks and sultry voice have harmonized behind many on-screen flings. This time around, his foot-stomping, clap–inducing anthems recall the jangly nerves and rushes of adrenaline of a first date. A native Oregonian, Kearney lets the high notes of his keyboard and upbeat drums frame his new sound. The result is a warm, West Coast folk feel. Get "Closer to Love" with Kearney on Nov. 4 at House of Blues. Kathleen Godbold

Scratching the Surface

Dividing Lines Despite the linear nature of Julie Weiman's paintings, her style is anything but straightforward. Drawing inspiration from pop art, abstract impressionism and Navajo weaving, Weiman's multicolored, mixed-media lines interlace history and textures. In an oblique reference to her suburban childhood, Weiman adds and subtracts sections of canvas to hint at complexities beneath the surface. See her latest exhibit, Wicked Lemonade, at the Bromfield Gallery through Nov. 26.

Golden Oldies

Text Me

Everyone has a stack of old books collecting dust in the attic, but that pile of pages might be worth a mint. The Boston International Antiquarian Book Fair brings more than 120 vendors and experts to Hynes Convention Center Nov. 11–13 to help you determine if it's worth scraping the cobwebs off that old copy of A Tale of Two Cities. Think of it as Antiques Roadshow for people who say they don't watch TV. Plus, there'll be plenty of rare and first-edition tomes for sale. Casey Rackham

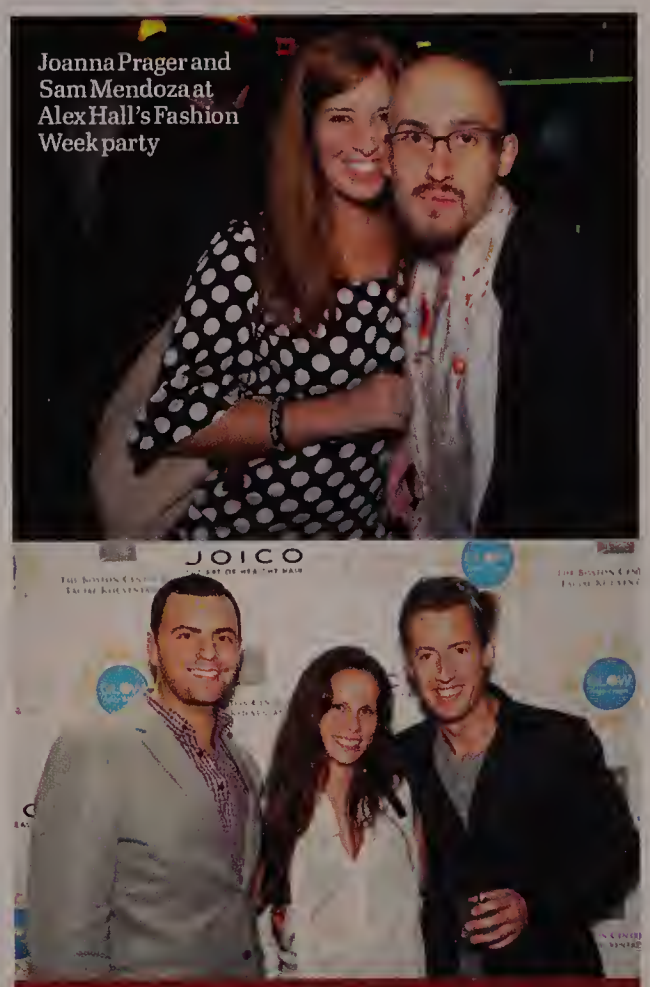
WEAR IT'S AT

À La Mode



This year, the seven days of fabulousness known as Boston Fashion Week kicked it up a notch, turned the volume up and otherwise upped the ante, and anyone involved can be forgiven for seeking substance abuse counseling, the solitude of a padded cell or, at the very least, a weekend with the covers pulled over their head now that it's over.

It began with the unveiling of the Tent, where most of the shows took place. On Friday night, things got off to a rollicking start with the Mike and Ton runway show, the collaboration between fashionista Tonya Chen Mezrich and couturier Michael DePaulo. It attracted such top-shelf socialites as Celtics grand poobah Wyc Grousbeck and his über-stylish wife, Corinne, brunette babe Linda Henry, fashion avatar Lisa Pierpont, newlyweds John Lam and John Ruggieri and equally sparkly others. A week later, the collaborative line of Argentine designer Daniela Corte and her Colombian muse, Ricardo Rodriguez, attracted the likes of party god Bryan Rafanelli and Boston's two answers to Iris Apfel—Doris Yaffe and Marilyn Riseman. Both evenings had decent gift bags, although why two of the city's top stylists needed free hair care products is a mystery.

In between those two shows were numerous others, all equally enthralling. One that didn't take place in the Tent was Denise Hajjar's, which she held in the Oval Room at the Copley Plaza as a fund-raiser for Dress for Success. Emceed by drop-dead gorgeous TV reporter Shayna Seymour, the clothes were as pretty as the room where they were modeled. And the Fashion Week craziness wasn't restricted to runway presentations; Alexandra Hall (full disclosure: she's the fashion and beauty editor of this magazine) hosted a party at new hotspot Forum to introduce the 10 most promising models in Boston. It was as slick and sexy a crowd as you could hope to find anywhere, including the likes of reigning hair deity Sal Malafronte, funnyman Steve Sweeney, Pied Piper of good times Bill Emery and one guy who actually tried repeatedly to use the pickup line "So, are you one of the 10 most promising faces?"

Of course, fashion is rarely served up without a good dose of silliness; hence, the following exchanges, heard throughout the week:

About an especially skinny model: "Here, sweetie, have some air turkey and Ex-Lax!"

Joanna Prager and Sam Mendoza at Alex Hall's Fashion Week party

Sal Malafronte, Joanna Humphrey and Tristan Govignon at Alex Hall's Fashion Week party

Daniela Corte and Ricardo Rodriguez at their runway show

Tonya Chen Mezrich and Michael DePaulo at their runway show

Katherine Chapman at Taste of Perkins

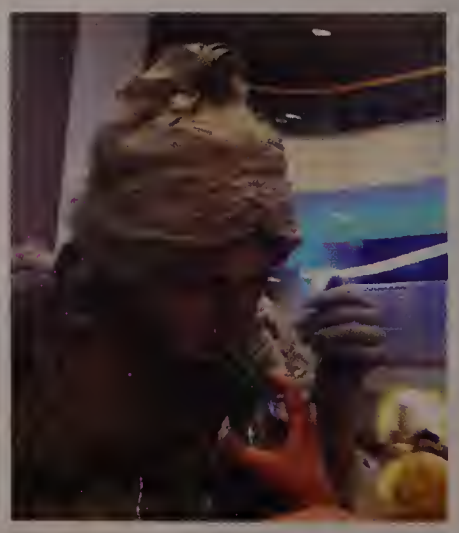
Joan and George Berman at Taste of Perkins

A woman saying, "You don't remember Courrèges in the '70s," to which the response was, "Of course, I do. I was a 10-year-old gay boy."

The Blind Meeting the Kind

Of all the "Taste of _____" parties in town, the most consistently interesting is Taste of Perkins, a fund-raiser for the school for the blind. Among other entertaining things, guests don blindfolds and try to identify different wines and food, both of which are top-notch. They also get to mingle among interesting artifacts like the 1837 globe on which Helen Keller learned geography (it seems odd that the Appalachians are so much bigger than the Rockies until you remember that no one knew what the Rockies were back then), and they can rub elbows with the likes of retired corporate lion George Berman and his stunning blonde stockbroker wife, Joan, the absurdly beautiful Katherine Chapman, gold broker Michael Stewart Dobies and restaurateur extraordinaire Mary-Catherine Deibel. Overheard by a tray of turkey meatballs with marmalade (much better than they sound):

"I think my father knew your father."



"Was he a surgeon?"

"No, a lawyer."

"Well, my father was pretty litigious for a surgeon."

Contest of the Month

The first reader to guess at what recent party the term "pyroclastic surge" was used in normal conversation, and the "living statues" pictured here were caught sipping water, will win an Improper Bostonian T-shirt, which won't protect you from a natural disaster but are perfect for sightseeing in southern Italy. ×××

The IMPROPER

Ghost of Dishes Past

Everyone's supposed to have cuddly memories about their grandmother's cooking. A glowing oven, a sun-dappled tablecloth and the waft of spice cookies are meant to winkle out feelings of love and security. Add a roast animal, a table at which everyone's correctly seated by age and gender, and all you need to complete the picture is Tiny Tim in the corner squeaking about fellowship. Bah, humbug.

My grandmother's kitchen was the sort of place cockroaches snubbed because of the lack of respectable dining options. The only color came from the rust stains in the sink, and since the windows opened onto an evil-smelling alleyway, she lit the place with searing bulbs that buzzed so loud you kept instinctively swatting. To a child, the sole item of interest was a dusty stack of single-serving cereal boxes—not the good, sugary ones, but the bathroom aids.

My grandmother was a flinty woman, not much devoted to the table, but on special occasions she produced a breed of Lithuanian dumpling. These were soggy, testicular objects, little wads of gray beef slung in a thin bag of dough, then boiled until limp. She liked to serve them in a rinse of melted butter and enough sour cream to give an elephant a coronary. The coup de grace: a crown of carbonized bacon.

I would give Nick Altschuller's right arm to taste those again.

In this issue, you can read the family recipes of a number of famous Bostonians, ideal for imprinting on the little, pliable minds of your progeny.

Finishing Touches

BEST FOR LAST

"THE SECRET TO A good dinner party is place cards," says former Improper photo editor Melanie Dunea. "You need to figure out the characters and how they'll all work together." Wrangling big personalities is a skill she's refined as a celebrity photographer. In My Last Supper: The Next Course, the follow-up to her hit debut cookbook, Dunea asks culinary legends (like Barbara Lynch, pictured) what they'd want for their final bite. "The unexpected answers, like David Chang's drinks or Tom Colicchio's international last supper, are the most fun," she says. It's a reminder that an element of surprise should always enliven your holiday table. KYLE WRIGHT

Good Eats

Fill the Bill

The ingredients read like a classic cold-weather app: rich duck, seasonal butternut squash, a crunchy element (house–honey-roasted peanuts) and a fall fruit (Asian pear). But the dressing is where Bergamot chef Keith Pooler innovates. Beginning with hoisin sauce and sherry vinegar, he adds body and savory depth with the incorporation of duck jus. Since the days of EVOO, this Somerville space has had a long history with great duck dishes, but Pooler's latest invention might be at the head of the flock.

Wine

Turkey Trio

If you're confused about the right wine to serve with your bird, relax. There isn't one. Turkey adapts to a wide range of styles. My advice is to avoid anything too light or delicate and to choose a wine with prominent fruit flavors, regardless of whether it's red or white. And since Thanksgiving is all about home, serving a bottle from the U.S. seems suited to the occasion.

So what's on the list this year? The usual suspects: chardonnay, pinot noir and zinfandel. The following are rich and substantial enough to appeal to novices as well as experts. Not that Thanksgiving is the time to do a lot of swirling and sniffing, but each of these is a recent blind-tasting winner, ideal for perking up even the driest of roast poultry.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

CHOOSE BIG FRUIT FLAVORS

Fogdog Chardonnay → Sonoma Coast, 2008 ($33, the Urban Grape) Rarely do we find a California chardonnay so well proportioned in this price range. It's moderate in alcohol with a smoky, toasty, baked apple and peach aroma that's very inviting. Lush and honeyed on the palate, there are buttery notes, but also plenty of zip. Fogdog will stand up nicely to stuffing, yams and the other traditional sides.

Belle Glos "Meiomi" Pinot Noir → Coastal California, 2010 ($26, Brighton Liquor Market) This has been a benchmark for sensual, cherry- and vanilla-scented pinot noir that's not shy about flaunting its fruit. A wine with impeccable bloodlines (produced by the Wagner family, of Caymus fame), the 2010 coats the palate with cinnamon, velvety red fruit and a hint of spice in the finish.

Seghesio Family Vineyards Zinfandel → Sonoma, 2009 ($22, Cambridge Wine & Spirits) What's more American than zinfandel? It's dramatic how zin varies depending on where the vines are grown, and with grapes from the Alexander and Dry Creek Valleys, this wine is among the most mellow and moderate in style. It has deep wild-berry flavors, a hint of chocolatey spice and gentle tannins, offering a huge mouthful of fruit without the heat or aggressiveness that can mar wines from warmer zones in California.

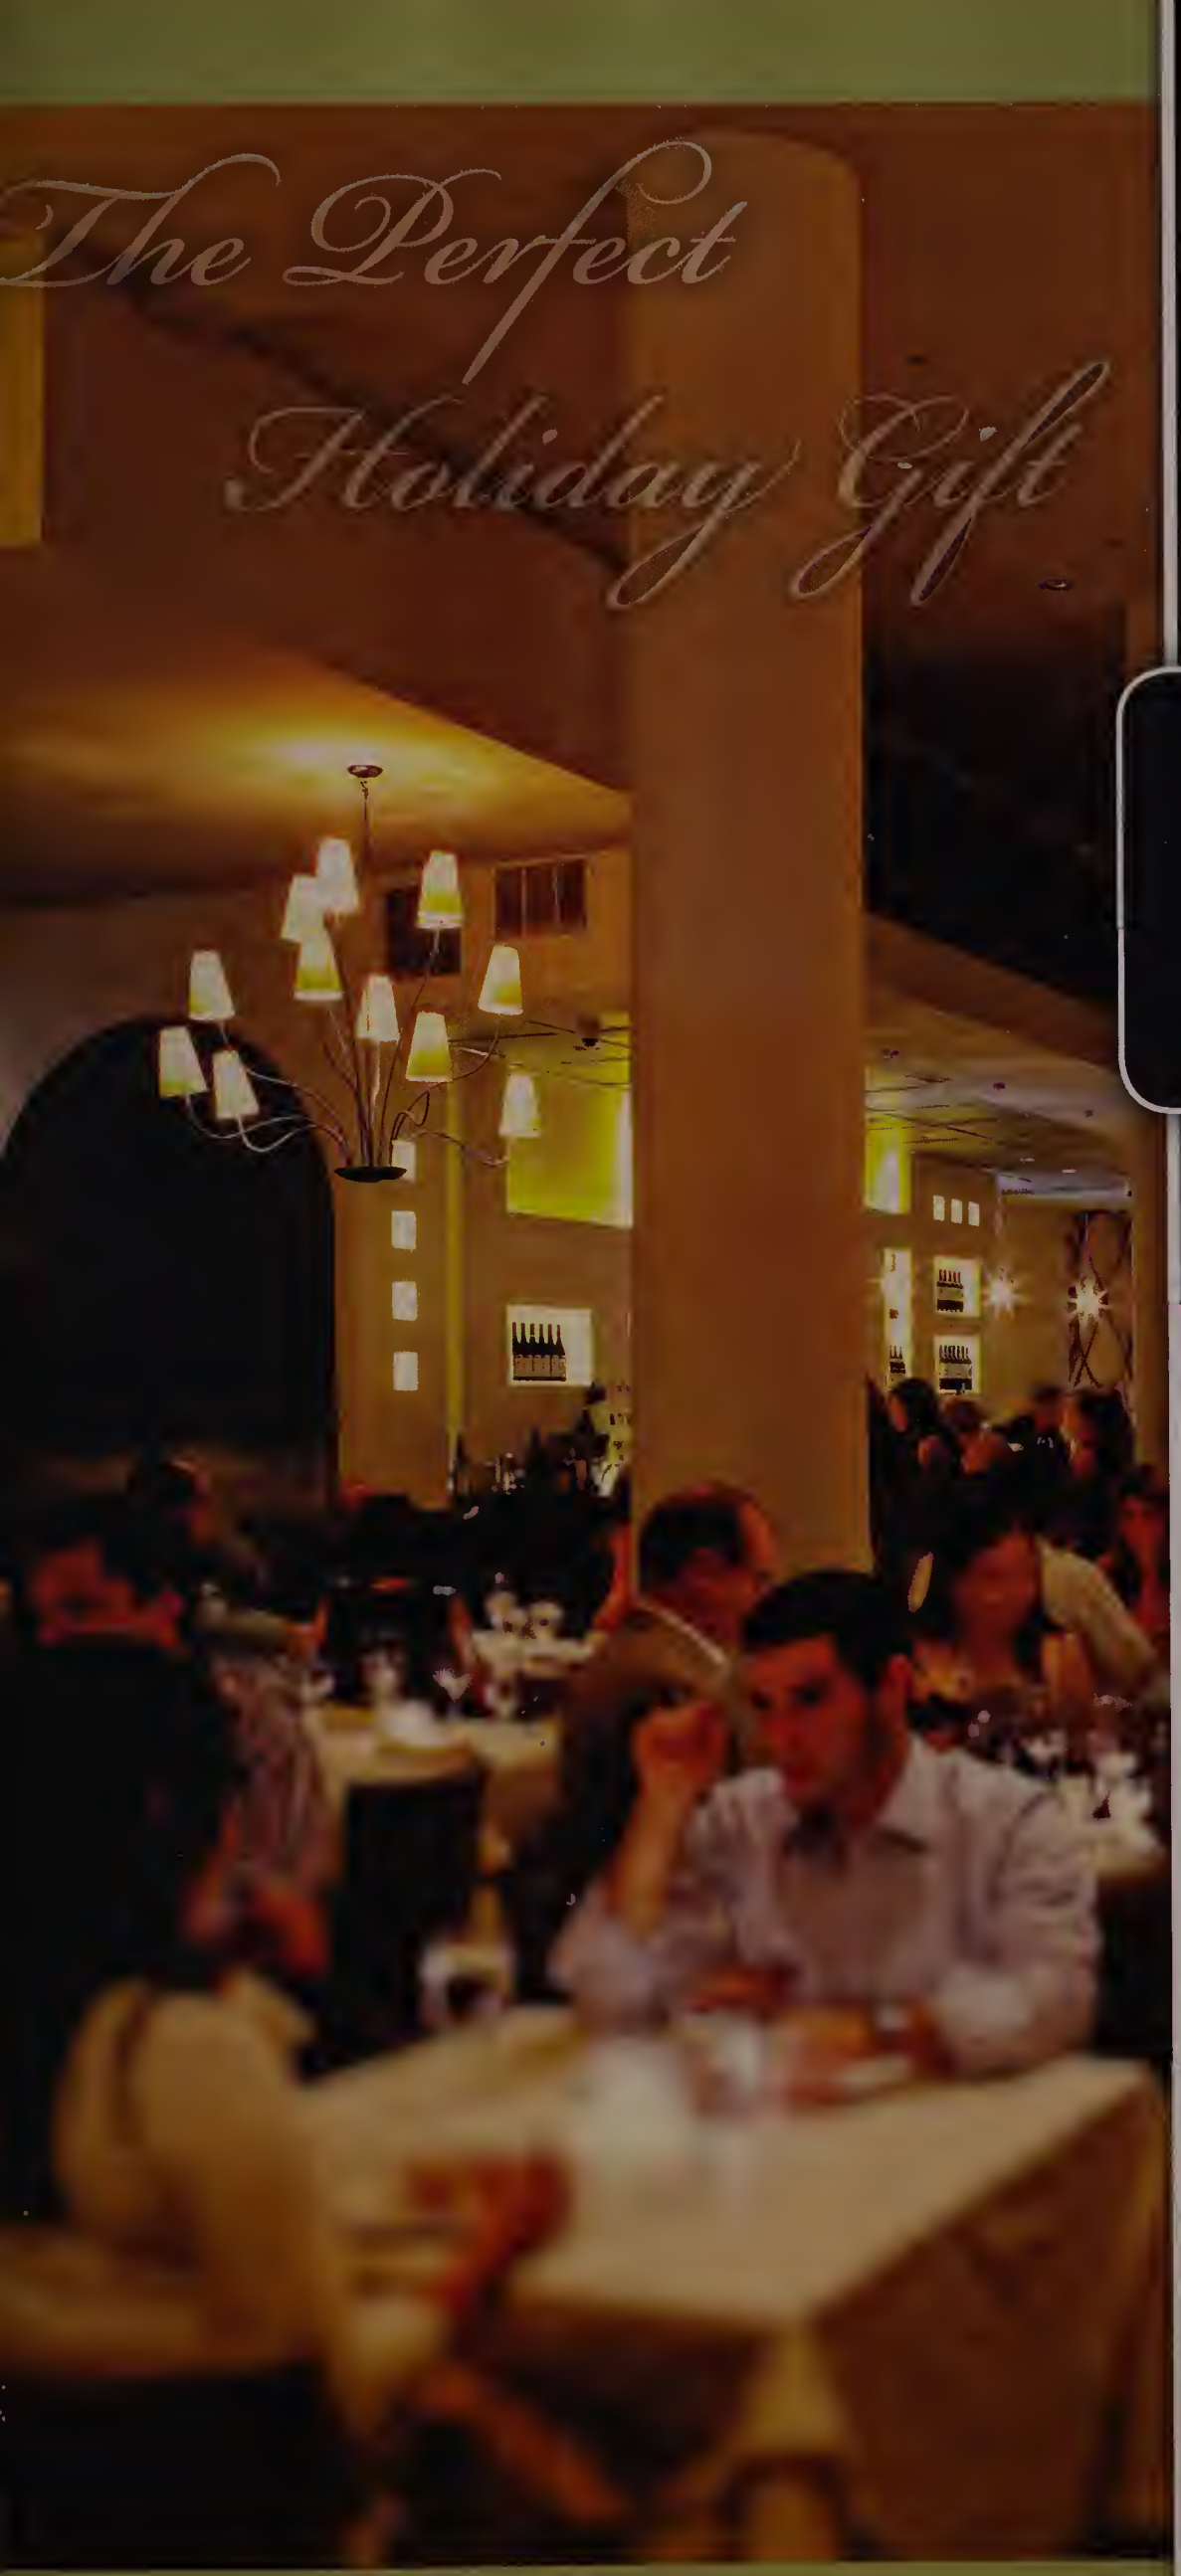
TRUE COLORS

TO THE TWO WOMEN AT THE CYNDI LAUPER CONCERT AT HOUSE OF BLUES ON OCT. 24: You may have "just been enjoying the concert," but it was at the expense of everybody else. Judging from your age, it was not the first time you've been to a live show, and standing-room etiquette is a virtue. Those who've stood at the front through the opening act deserve to be there when the singer approaches the audience. But you decided to rush the stage and push aside kids much younger than you. And you got to hold Cyndi's hand. Girls just wanna have fun, but not with b*es like you.

She-bop you in the head

A few rules of the road:



I can't remember the last time I went through a toll and didn't see a near accident. I have yet to approach one that is not clearly marked a mile out, and it should be pretty obvious which lanes are for Fast Pass only. So many of you clueless drivers out there wait until the last possible second to cut over to the cash-only lane. Please start reading the signs more closely. Places to go

To the man riding his bike on Washington Street:

I had just finished crossing the street when you yelled "Watch where you're going or you're going to get hit, you stupid b*!" Riding your bike on the sidewalk proved your lack of intelligence. Plus you weren't even going three miles per hour. I laugh at your stupidity!

First Taste

PIGALLE, PART DEUX

Bay Village restaurant Pigalle's renovations were, according to co-owner Kerri Foley, like an episode of The Newlywed Game. She and her husband, chef Marc Orfaly, "each had things we really wanted to change, so for a long time it was like we were comparing notes," she says, leaning against a rounded banquette in the freshly-painted dining room.

Rumors of a revamp had been swirling for the better part of a year, but after hosting a birthday party last month for Aerosmith bassist Tom Hamilton, Foley and Orfaly finally got down to business. "All of a sudden, it felt like the right time," Foley says.

Although they were only closed for five days, the impact is immense. Chandeliers that looked stuffy and formal in the dining room have been relocated to the bathroom, where they add a touch of unexpected luxe. Panels of Victorian tapestry will soon make way for modern collages. Hardwood floor gleams in place of carpet, and the entire space has been whitewashed to open it up.

"People always think of us as a special-occasion restaurant," Foley says. "Now, you can come to have a great cocktail and a burger." The new L-shaped bar trades marble for stained oak, which will show a comfortable wear over time. A revamped bar menu adds shareable plates, including Orfaly's "King of the Wing"–winning chicken wings and fried oysters, to pair with cocktails from veteran mix-master Michael Florence. A black-and-white checkerboard motif graces the floor.

For Orfaly, achieving the new look was a balancing act. "We wanted our regular clientele to be excited, but not overwhelmed," he says. In the dining room, his menu will stick to the formula that's worked for the past 12 years. Overhead, the arched ceiling, a remnant from when the space was a Greek restaurant, has turned a warm shade of apricot, but the columns that crowded the tables have now vanished. "I've always hated them, but people kept saying they were support for the building above us. It's amazing what you find when you start digging."

PECKING ORDER

Beyond Butterball

HERE'S A surprise: November isn't National Turkey Lovers Month (June is, according to the National Turkey Federation). Not so surprising is the fact that Americans eat a lot of it year-round. Per capita consumption has doubled since 1975, from just over eight pounds to more than 16 pounds last year.

On Thanksgiving, nearly 88 percent of Americans carve a mass-produced holiday bird. Most domesticated turkeys are raised on factory farms in the South and Midwest, which means they're hatched in a huge incubator, are immediately debeaked to discourage feather picking and cannibalism (yes, cannibalism) and crowded into windowless sheds where they're stuffed with corn and soybean meal until they grow so big they can't walk.

Alternately, you could shoot your own wild bird. And you won't have to travel too far. Last fall, of the 149 turkeys "harvested" during the six-day season, seven were taken in Middlesex County, according to the Massachusetts chapter of the National Wild Turkey Federation. Although they're gamier than their domesticated cousins, these bug-and-acorn-eaters can be prepared in a variety of recipes helpfully featured on the NWTF website.

Haven't got the killer instinct? Consider the local farms that raise presumably happier, and tastier, turkeys than those processed at faraway factories. At the nonprofit Natick Community Organic Farm, turkeys consume an organic grain diet from the day they hatch. Out in central Massachusetts in Hardwick, the daughter of the founder of Stillman's Farm raises both traditional and heritage turkeys using "artisan, sustainable" practices. Also in Hardwick, Chestnut Farms pledges to use "traditional and humane farming" on its pasture-raised turkeys. And if you simply must have a certified organic heritage breed, check out Green Meadows Farm in South Hamilton.

Drink of the Moment

Tea Party

SILENT HERO PUNCH

The Citizen Public House and Oyster Bar, 1310 Boylston St., Boston (617-450-9000) citizenpub.com

INGREDIENTS: English Breakfast tea, chamomile tea, lemon peel, lemon juice, Brugal Añejo rum, yellow Chartreuse, Bitter Truth lemon bitters, raw sugar.

PRICE: $8 per person.

THE NAME: "Silent" refers to the monks who make Chartreuse, and "hero" salutes the independence of the Dominican Republic, where Brugal Añejo is made.

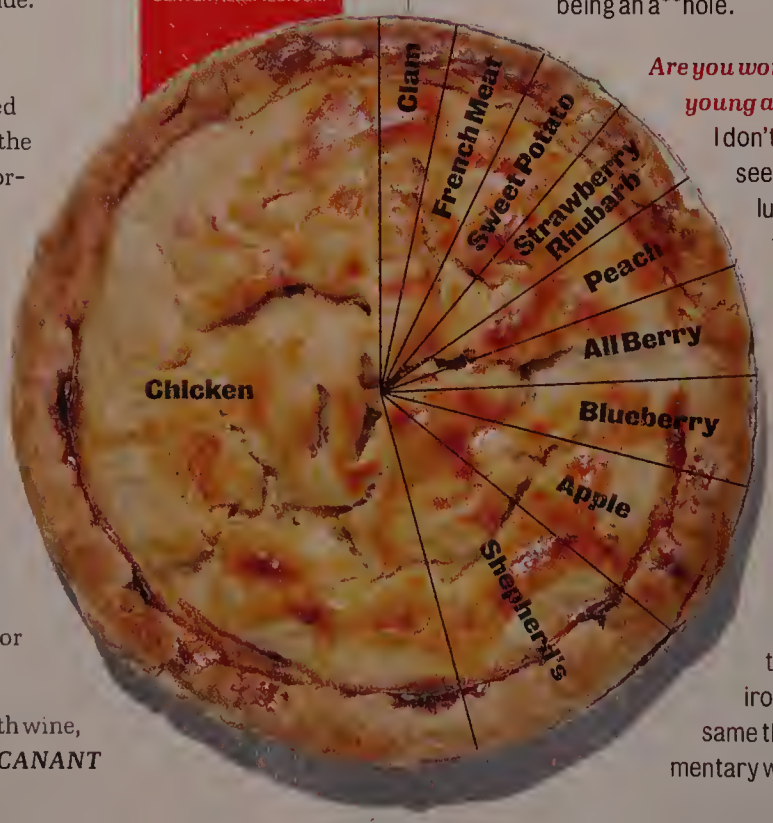
INVENTOR: Joy Richard.

STREET CRED: She's a founding member of LUPEC Boston (Ladies United for the Preservation of Endangered Cocktails) and the mastermind behind the craft cocktails menus at the Franklin Cafe and Franklin Southie. Most importantly, she won this year's Boston's Best Mixologist award.

TASTING NOTES: The ingredients fuse together in a toasty blend without one flavor predominating. Chartreuse newbies get an accessible introduction to the liqueur's characteristics on the back palate.

WHO DRINKS IT: Patrons with time to sit and stay awhile, since bowls hold two servings per customer.

BUZZWORDS THAT IMPRESS: Tannins, coupe, a-wassailing.



BONUS POINTS: Punches are made for groups of four or more, so you'll be enjoying alongside friends (or you can make a few in the process).

ALSO ORDER: Warm grog made with wine, sherry and vermouth. LINDSEY CANANT

COMIC INTENT
Bo Burnham

Q&A

OH, BO YOU DIDN'T!

Bo Burnham's career skyrocketed in 2006 after his politically incorrect musical comedy sketches went viral on YouTube. The 21-year-old Hamilton, Mass., native has since released two albums, recorded Comedy Central specials and appeared in films including Funny People and Hall Pass. Burnham brings his show to the Wilbur Theatre on Nov. 26.

Are you a comedian who sings or a singer who's funny?
I'm a comedian first and a musician, like, seventh. Although I don't know what the six things between those would be. I'm trying to fuse music and comedy because I think that, in general, music is dominated by serious thoughts.

What's the deal with the album you've been talking about on Twitter?
I wanted to do an album that was a little bit outside of my comfort zone. The music is still funny, but it's more focused. It's a little pop but half musical theater.

And you're planning on releasing it for free?
Yeah, I figured if I did that, people can't be angry with me for things that I say. It's also a way of getting back to my roots. I started online for free, so it's a way of saying thank you.

Do you worry about offending people?
When I was younger, I was probably more offensive than I am now. You can be edgy to be funny, and people are entitled to be offended. The only people who really find me offensive anyway are uptight, bourgeois yuppies.

What distinguishes a Boston audience?
Well, five years ago I would've said girls in black leggings and a North Face, but that disease has spread across the country. Boston has always been a great comedy city. It's built on everybody being an ahole.

Are you worried that fame achieved at such a young age won't last?
I don't expect it to. A life of touring doesn't seem incredibly appealing to me. I'm very lucky to be able to dedicate so much time to refining my performances right now, but very rarely does that last.

What's the story behind your new MTV show?
I read a poll that asked kids what they wanted to be when they grew up, and most of them said "famous." So I created a scripted comedy called Zach Stone Is Gonna Be Famous, about a kid who graduates from high school and tries to do just that. I'm completely in tune with the irony in my own career. Basically it's the same thing as a heroin addict doing a documentary while still on heroin. KYLE WRIGHT

Family Affair

Growing up in a Greek home, Katie Rooney knew the family recipes. But to make her business her own, she did some tweaking. The proprietor of Somerville's just-opened 3 Little Figs admits that while her relatives are still warming up to her "best-ever" spinach pie, customers approve of the changes. Her unconventional treats—including lavender-scented scones, squash-yogurt Bundt cake and a killer egg and feta breakfast sandwich—have enjoyed a cult following since her days selling at local farmers' markets. If they try a plate of the revised spanakopita, her relatives won't be far behind.

Beauty

CONDITIONAL SENTENCE

I care about hair conditioners the way some people care about local charities. That isn't to say I disregard the latter, but not before my hair situation's under control. (You can't save others 'til you've saved yourself, right?)

When I have damage, I revert to a dependable classic: JOICO'S K-PAK REVITALUXE ($24, Maxime Salon, 1 Derby St., Hingham, 781-749-2239), lovingly known as "the Conditionator" among product whores. But the arrival of newcomers never stops. The latest big contender is BIOMEGA ($17, the Loft Salon, 253 Newbury St., Boston, 617-536-5638), created by NASA scientists. "It's the first time anyone's been able to mix oils with water," says the Loft Salon owner Michael Albor. "Remember when Marcia Brady brushed her hair 300 times? That worked the oils from her head through her hair. Biomega gives that kind of softness."

Other experts swear by different solutions. ORIBE SIGNATURE MOISTURE MASK ($46, James Joseph Salon, 30 Newbury St., Boston, 617-266-7222) is the go-to for James Joseph Salon founder William George. "It hydrates, but doesn't add weight. It's pure luxury in a bottle." That's what made me a conditioner addict in the first place. Clearly, I've got a long road of testing products ahead of me. Preferably a smooth (as silk) one.

BAKED GOODS

A novel of love, loss and pie

ZELL ROY BECOMES A YOUNG widow when her husband, Nick, a photographer, is killed helping the victims of Hurricane Katrina. Zell's sudden solitude, with only her dog, Ahab, for companionship, tosses her into a quirky obsession with the TV cooking show of Polly Pinch—a character who hovers on the threshold of unbelievable. The program is offering a $20,000 prize for an original recipe, so Zell submits a cacophonously flavorful pie to the contest, hoping to win and donate money to Katrina relief.

Meanwhile, she sends e-mails to her beloved departed Nick, and, reading his own correspondences, we get to know his good heart. Grief finds sympathy in the form of her neighbor Garrett, single dad of Ingrid, who, in an odd turn, believes Polly Pinch to be her mother.

A Pinch of Love
by Alicia Bessette

Bessette lives in Massachusetts.

These ties of loss and reconnection thread throughout the novel. A dreaded home-economics teacher reappears in Zell's life as a fascinating fellow adult, who in turn befriends Ingrid. Ahab disappears, and the dog-hunt throws Zell together with Garrett. When the characters finally meet Polly, their ironies, sorrows and sweetness surprisingly match the interesting oddity of Zell's pie. ✖✖✖

LOOKING UP

Toronto is a city on the rise.

MODERN LIVING The Dining Room at the Drake, the EdgeWalk and a room at the Thompson Toronto

THE BEST PLACE TO BEGIN a tour of Toronto is in the air, with all the city's superlatives in view. To the south is Lake Ontario and the city islands, home to Porter Airlines, where after a quick flight from Boston, the world's shortest ferry ride (400 feet) drops you off downtown. To the north is Greater Toronto, one of North America's fastest growing cities and home to one out of every five Canadians. Below is nothing but 1,200 feet of atmosphere and the few vital inches of metal grating that make the highest aerial walk on the planet.

Shaped like the Space Needle but triple the size, the CN Tower was the world's tallest freestanding structure until 2007. Earlier this year, perhaps in response to losing the crown, they added the EdgeWalk. After being harnessed to a safety rail and swept for loose change, visitors venture on a 30-minute guided stroll, take in a 360-degree view of the landscape, and pause to poke their toes out over the Steam Whistle Brewery or hang their rear over the retractable roof of the Rogers Centre, home of the Toronto Blue Jays.

A few short blocks away is the Thompson Toronto, one of several "lifestyle" hotels popping up in the cosmopolitan locale. It's the kind of place where the bellmen wear gingham shirts and skinny jeans, and the definition of "modern amenity" includes a door for the toilet but not for the shower. Even so, with heated floors and a showerhead bigger than a hubcap, comfort is never in question.

The hotel hosts a nightclub in the basement and a private bar with a pool on the roof. In between are three restaurants, including a diner serving fat breakfasts and spiked milk shakes 24 hours a day. Although there are only 102 rooms, the Thompson is such a hotspot that more than 1,000 people can pack the place on a weekend night. You may find a confused reveler knocking on your door Sunday morning, leaving both of you with a story to tell.

For weekend rambles, stick to King or Queen, two avenues that cross the spectrum of downtown Toronto. Heading east from the hotel, hit the heart of the business district and dally in St.

DRAKE'S PROGRESS Toronto's nighttime revels

Lawrence Market. (It's like Quincy Market, except locals actually shop there.) Once in Old Toronto, it's hard not to be floored by the speed of the city's evolution. The home of the city's first mayor? It's now a Starbucks. Site of the first parliament? A parking lot. Past the Distillery District (picture SoWa in 10 years), there's a whole new neighborhood being built for the Pan Am Games in 2015. Facing back toward the city, rows of cranes perch on the urban silhouette, creating an ever-expanding skyline.

On the return walk, a quiet restaurant like Kultura serves up a taste of Toronto's vaunted multiculturalism, with dishes like tandoori octopus salad with chermoula, yogurt, candied red onion and kohlrabi. Or head to West Queen West, a lively SoHo-like neighborhood marked by galleries, boutiques, funky poutine shops and fancy bakeries, like Nadège Patisserie offering mojito macarons and gin-and-tonic marshmallows.

For nightlife, the Gladstone and the Drake are two more lifestyle hotels with a decidedly independent flair. The Gladstone is a former flophouse, but now sports a hip-hippie vibe with organic burgers and a bar where a young Ginsberg fan might croon drunken karaoke. Just down the road, the Drake is packed with a fashionable crowd in the basement concert venue and in the Dining Room, which changes themes seasonally (from the nostalgic Summer Camp to the unusual 1940s L.A. Chinatown). Visit the rooftop Sky Yard to quaff steins with a predominantly local and lighthearted throng.

It's obvious that the Toronto of today won't resemble the Toronto of tomorrow. It's fun in flux, a tour of transformation, so the time to head north is now. ✖✖✖

4257 Washington St., Roslindale
(617-325-1000)

SHELL CORPORATION The tomato broth for the seafood stew gets a kick from fennel and Pernod.

THE MICHELIN GUIDE HAS always been my mandatory reference when planning travel in France. Its ratings are expressed in terms of logistics: A two-star eatery is worth a detour; three stars, a special journey. Another French criterion of restaurant worthiness, rapport qualité-prix, puts good food at bargain prices on the map. But there's a third factor we often overlook, until its absence is so striking or its effect so resounding: friendliness. Applying all three criteria, Redd's in Rozzie is well worth a drive to the suburbs (or a look at the commuter rail schedule).

Redd's eclectic menu is imaginatively conceived and skillfully rendered by chef/owner Charlie Redd, formerly of Coda. The "Snacks" category included crispy avocado ($3.95), buttery slices delicately breaded and fried to create counterpoints of texture. Hush puppies ($4.95) the size of tennis balls were doughy but tasty, and came with a delightful, bacon-studded sweet-onion ragout. Three broiled Wellfleet clams ($4.95), their stuffing laced with rich, savory chards of house-cured pancetta, were an excellent preamble to a meal. Even better were the empanadas de carne ($3.95), a perfect melding of tender pastry and soft, savory filling.

Middle courses, labeled "Little Somethin' More" included superb whole-belly Ipswich clams ($9.95) in a delicate cornmeal breading, which reconfirmed the local bivalves' affinity to the deep fryer. Another regional dish, this one drawing on Redd's North Carolina roots, is the flavorful pulled pork sandwich ($9.95), its fattiness parried by crunchy, tangy slaw. On the more delicate side, a refreshing salad ($4.95) of Bibb lettuce, thin radish slices, shallots and crispy croutons lathered with delectable goat cheese came dressed in a balanced Champagne vinaigrette.

Redd's last category, aptly named "Hearty Fare," consisted of superior entrees like the pristinely fresh pan-seared haddock ($16.95) paired with a moist brandade cake and house-made tartar sauce. Grilled rainbow trout ($17.95) had equally exemplary texture but suffered from a bizarre presentation in which a mound of mashed potatoes covered most of the splayed fish. Less potato and more of the delicious mustard greens would considerably enhance the dish. A generous array of mussels, clams, shrimp, haddock and Italian sausage graced a seafood stew ($16.95). An irresistible aroma of fennel and USER FRIENDLY Redd's is easy and approachable.

Pernod added a luxurious dimension to an already excellent tomato broth.

Butternut squash and sautéed kale paired beautifully with an adroitly herbed and juicy roasted half chicken ($15.95), one of the best main courses on offer. But the grilled pork chop ($18.95) was too thin to survive an overlong sojourn on the grill, arriving dry. Its accompanying bratwurst proved more satisfactory, as did the rich braised cabbage and buttery spaetzle. Desserts included a luscious poached pear ($4.95) and Redd's justly acclaimed pecan pie ($4.95).

In addition to draft and bottled beers, wine choices ranged from Piquepoul ($22), a bargain-priced Languedoc white that paired well with the fish, to the more refined 2007 Cannonau Riserva ($36), a full-bodied Sardinian red with a magnificent bouquet.

What it lacks in flash, Redd's in Rozzie makes up in consistency and value. The lack of pretension is evident from the moment you arrive, since the restaurant lies hidden in a nondescript block of Washington Street. But your search has its reward. Once inside this paradigm of a neighborhood eatery, you're a welcome guest, not a mere customer. The warmth of the staff is a given; the excellence of the food, an unexpected dividend. ×××

The story of my life, and how it was rejected.

Read more at improper.com/blogs

Claim to fame

I'VE ACCOMPLISHED A LOT IN my storied career. I've seen Manitoba, interviewed Tom Arnold and lain naked in an electrified bathtub (by way of explanation, that was in Japan). Despite these achievements, there's one mountain I haven't climbed, one plaudit that's eluded me throughout the years. I'm ashamed to admit it, but I don't have a Wikipedia page.

It never occurred to me that I should want a Wikipedia page, until a snide YouTube commenter posted something to the effect of, "Who is this guy? He doesn't even have a Wikipedia page." The implication is that you're a zero, a mere oxygen-sucking blot on the planet, until Wikipedia says otherwise. And I completely agree.

If I want to take my life to the next level, I need Wikipedia. It's frankly embarrassing that I'm not on there. Just in the D's alone you've got nobodies like Roald Dahl and Charles Darwin and Fyodor Dostoevsky. But if no one is going to make me a Wikipedia page, I'll just have to do it myself.

Not everyone is notable enough to earn a coveted Wikipedia bio, as evidenced by its vast graveyard of rejected submissions. There are more than 200 entries on the first page alone. If you want to kill a few hours, Wikipedia's rejected-bio cache offers a fascinating glimpse into the human condition.

Not at all well-known wrestler "Cervante the Latin Vampire" is one guy who failed the notability test. Ditto for an Estonian named Apehog who claims to be the most famous member of his family. And I definitely want to meet Ivana Von Zwettler: "She is a Slovenka (women from Slovakia), and love tattoos!! She love extreme sport—sharkdiving, bungee jump—did it."

If Ivana Von Zwettler's love of tattoos and bungee jump doesn't warrant our collective notice, then there's really no hope for Jeff Stewart, a former Jeopardy contestant who won $50,800 and a Dodge Dakota. Hey Jeff Stewart, here's a Jeopardy answer for you: Someone who's not worthy of a page on Wikipedia. Question: Who is Jeff Stewart? By the way, Ken Jennings lights Dodge Dakotas on fire to heat his mansion made of money.

According to Wikipedia's ruthless parsing of human value, Katy Perry makes the cut but Ann Hudson, Perry's grandmother, does not. A 13-year-old American Indian named Kyra Lynn Big Knife failed the notability test, even though her dad has the coolest name ever—Ace Big Knife. On the other end of the cool-name spectrum, there's a certain Wiki-wannabe police officer from India who has an extremely rough moniker: Kuntal Kishore. "Hi, my name's Kuntal, but you can call me... Mr. Kishore."

After spending way too long perusing the dashed dreams of the unworthy, I decide to take a crack at my own submission. I write a few paragraphs about myself—I mean, "someone else" writes a few paragraphs about me, because Wikipedia considers autobiography to be a conflict of interest—and hit the submit button. Within a few hours, the Wikipedia machine spits back its verdict: rejected. The terse message reads, "It appears your submission is an attempt to be humorous over being factual." Attempt? I'll show you an attempt. Hey, what do you call an encyclopedia covered in jam? A stickypedia.

In fact, Wikipedia, it's true that I once lost a pound-for-pound bench-press competition to a 40-year-old woman, but I protested the male-female equivalency formula and eventually won the trophy. It's also 100 percent true that I have not been in jail since 1996 and my IMDB StarMeter is up 3,569,641 places this week, whatever that means. Finally, my mother did give me a copy of the Dyer family tree that asserts that I'm descended from William the Conqueror. Or, as I call him now, King Grampa.

However, upon closer review, there were a few mistakes in my proposal. I did not recently conquer sesquipedalophobia, or the fear of long words. I am not the editor of a quarterly newsletter called Elf Enthusiast, for people who appreciate elves year-round. And although my appearances on cable TV have resulted in my being twice recognized in public, that crushing level of celebrity has not prompted me to check into hotels under the alias "Ron Mexico." Curse these unauthorized biographers who don't listen carefully to one's dictated notes.

I suppose I could resubmit my bio with all the lies and errors removed, but then I might earn a sincere, no-kidding rejection. And I can't have that. I prefer to mock Wikipedia's haughty air of authority from the safety of my ironic perch, rather than risk an earnest assessment that I'm just not that big a deal. So here I remain, my place in the Wikipedia canon neither affirmed nor decisively rejected, somewhere between Roald Dahl and Cervante the Latin Vampire. Right where I belong. ×××

CRISIS OF FAITH

Defending the Pats is getting tougher.

Courtesy of the New England Patriots Football Club

THERE WAS A TIME WHEN we could always count on the New England Patriots, and for three good reasons: Robert Kraft, Bill Belichick and Tom Brady. It seems every NFL dynasty has that strong troika of ownership, coach and quarterback.

Like death and taxes, you knew you could rely on the Patriots being a contender every season. I'm wondering if that's the case anymore.

The Celtics, Red Sox and Bruins have all won championships more recently than the Patriots. Justifiably or not, championships are how we judge our favorite teams. It's win or bust.

And the Pats have themselves to blame for that mentality. As the new millennium rang in, the team was the definition of NFL success. They were tougher, smarter and flat-out better than the rest of the league.

The other Boston teams got the message and started to emulate the Patriots, especially in their professionalism on and off the field. Lo and behold, everybody started winning. But somehow, the Patriots lost their grip on what made them great.

There were plenty of reasons to believe in this year's team coming out of the preseason. Sure, they hadn't won a playoff game since 2008, but I was impressed with some of their personnel upgrades, especially with defensemen Shaun Ellis and Albert Haynesworth (since waived). Though his reputation is beginning to lose some luster, Belichick has always been viewed as an expert defensive coach. As long as he had healthy bodies, the X's and O's of his game plans would take care of everything else.

Perhaps the expectations of fans and local media feed the problem. I was crazy this summer. I thought this team had a chance to set the clock back to 2007 and perfection.

I remember watching the Aug. 18 preseason game against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers—a dangerous, up-and-coming team—in complete awe. New defensive end Andre Carter looked like Andre Tippett. Belichick's defense steamrolled the Bucs' offensive line like they were the '85 Bears. I called my friends and told them, "Undefeated, baby!"

Now, halfway through the 2011 season, I'm sick to my stomach. Largely about the so-called defense.

The pass rush, the cornerstone of every great defense, has never been worse. Ever since Mike Vrabel started slowing down in 2005 and 2006, I can't remember a Pats defender making himself a threat to opposing quarterbacks. The Patriots, it appears, have given up trying to do so. Their performance against the Steelers was embarrassing, dropping seven and eight defenders back to stop the pass. Even Ben Roethlisberger, who doesn't have the most accurate arm in the NFL, cheerfully completed 36 of 50 passes. Watching that, I couldn't help being embarrassed for Belichick.

The pass rush isn't the only problem, although you could argue it's the team's biggest. They can't cover anybody, which isn't a surprise when you see people like Phillip Adams and Antwuan Molden playing most of the game. Forget about being household names, these are barely remembered by sportswriters.

Last year, at least we had "shutdown" Devin McCourty. No longer. He appears to be in a sophomore slump of epic proportions, or maybe everyone overrated his Pro Bowl season. Either way, I'm as confused as Belichick seems to be. Take his approach to his defensive backs: He cut Leigh Bodden two days before the Steelers game. Why two days? Why not do it on the previous Monday if he was that awful?

"Awful" is a word that's getting hard to avoid. I know the Patriots are still near the top of the AFC East standings, but they're on an undeniable downward path. ✖✖✖

THANKSGIVING WITH BOB, TIM AND TWITTER

5 THINGS TO BE THANKFUL FOR

Robert Kraft
Without Kraft, there are no Super Bowls, no Bill Belichick and no Tom Brady. There's no "New England" Patriots or a 2011 NFL season. So maybe it takes 30 minutes to walk to your car after a game, and another three hours to escape Route 1. Maybe Patriot Place is a little cheesy and obnoxious. It's a small price to pay for the best owner in the biz.

NFL RedZone What was life like before the RedZone channel? I can't remember, and honestly, I don't want to. Gone are the days of sitting through Bills vs. Dolphins, depending on the bottom line for fantasy updates, using the remote or even speaking to your loved ones. It's everything a football fan needs. (Just brace yourself for the scandal once it's revealed that Scott Hanson's a robot.)

SECOND CHANCE Pedroia will help win fans back.

Jacoby Elisbury and Dustin Pedroia
Not everyone on the Red Sox roster is an ahole. They still have an extremely likable squad, thanks in large part to Ellsbury and Pedroia. They're the best one-two combo in the game and a major reason why the Sox will win everyone back this spring. Be extra thankful for Ellsbury—only one year until his contract's up and he runs off to Wrigley.

Tim Thomas Now that the Bruins are headed in the right direction, and the playoffs are more possibility than pipe dream, we can take a breath and bask in the luxury of having the NHL's best goalie. Sure, maybe the stats aren't quite there this season, but once the postseason starts, there's no one more capable of pulling off a miracle. Except maybe Jesus. Or Tim Tebow.

Twitter It's far from perfect, but following sports has been forever revolutionized by the squeaky little bird. I mean, how else would you ever know what Nate Robinson had for breakfast, who Gronk's hanging with during the bye week and what Ray Allen would like to do with his—no, wait. Forget it! He was hacked!

Michael Ivins/Boston Red Sox

1 ONE OLD FRIEND

After 10 years away from the game, it's great to see Dan Duquette get another shot in the majors. (Baltimore's still the majors, right?) Anyway, here are my predictions: 1. Duquette builds a great team. 2. Theo replaces him in 2019. 3. The O's win the World Series in 2021. 4. Theo's a genius!

4 DATES TO WATCH

11/21: For some reason, the NFL thought it was a good idea for the Pats and Chiefs to play on Monday Night Football. So... here we are. Take it away, Hank! (I'll never admit he's gone.)

11/24: Happy Thanksgiving! Question: Does it count as cannibalism when Albert Haynesworth eats turkey?

11/25: BC heads down to the Orange Bowl for a meeting with Miami. On the brightside, Eagles fans, I'm sure this loss will eventually be wiped from the record.

11/27: The Pats are in Philly to take on the Eagles, who, It turns out, are more Dream Opponent than Dream Team.

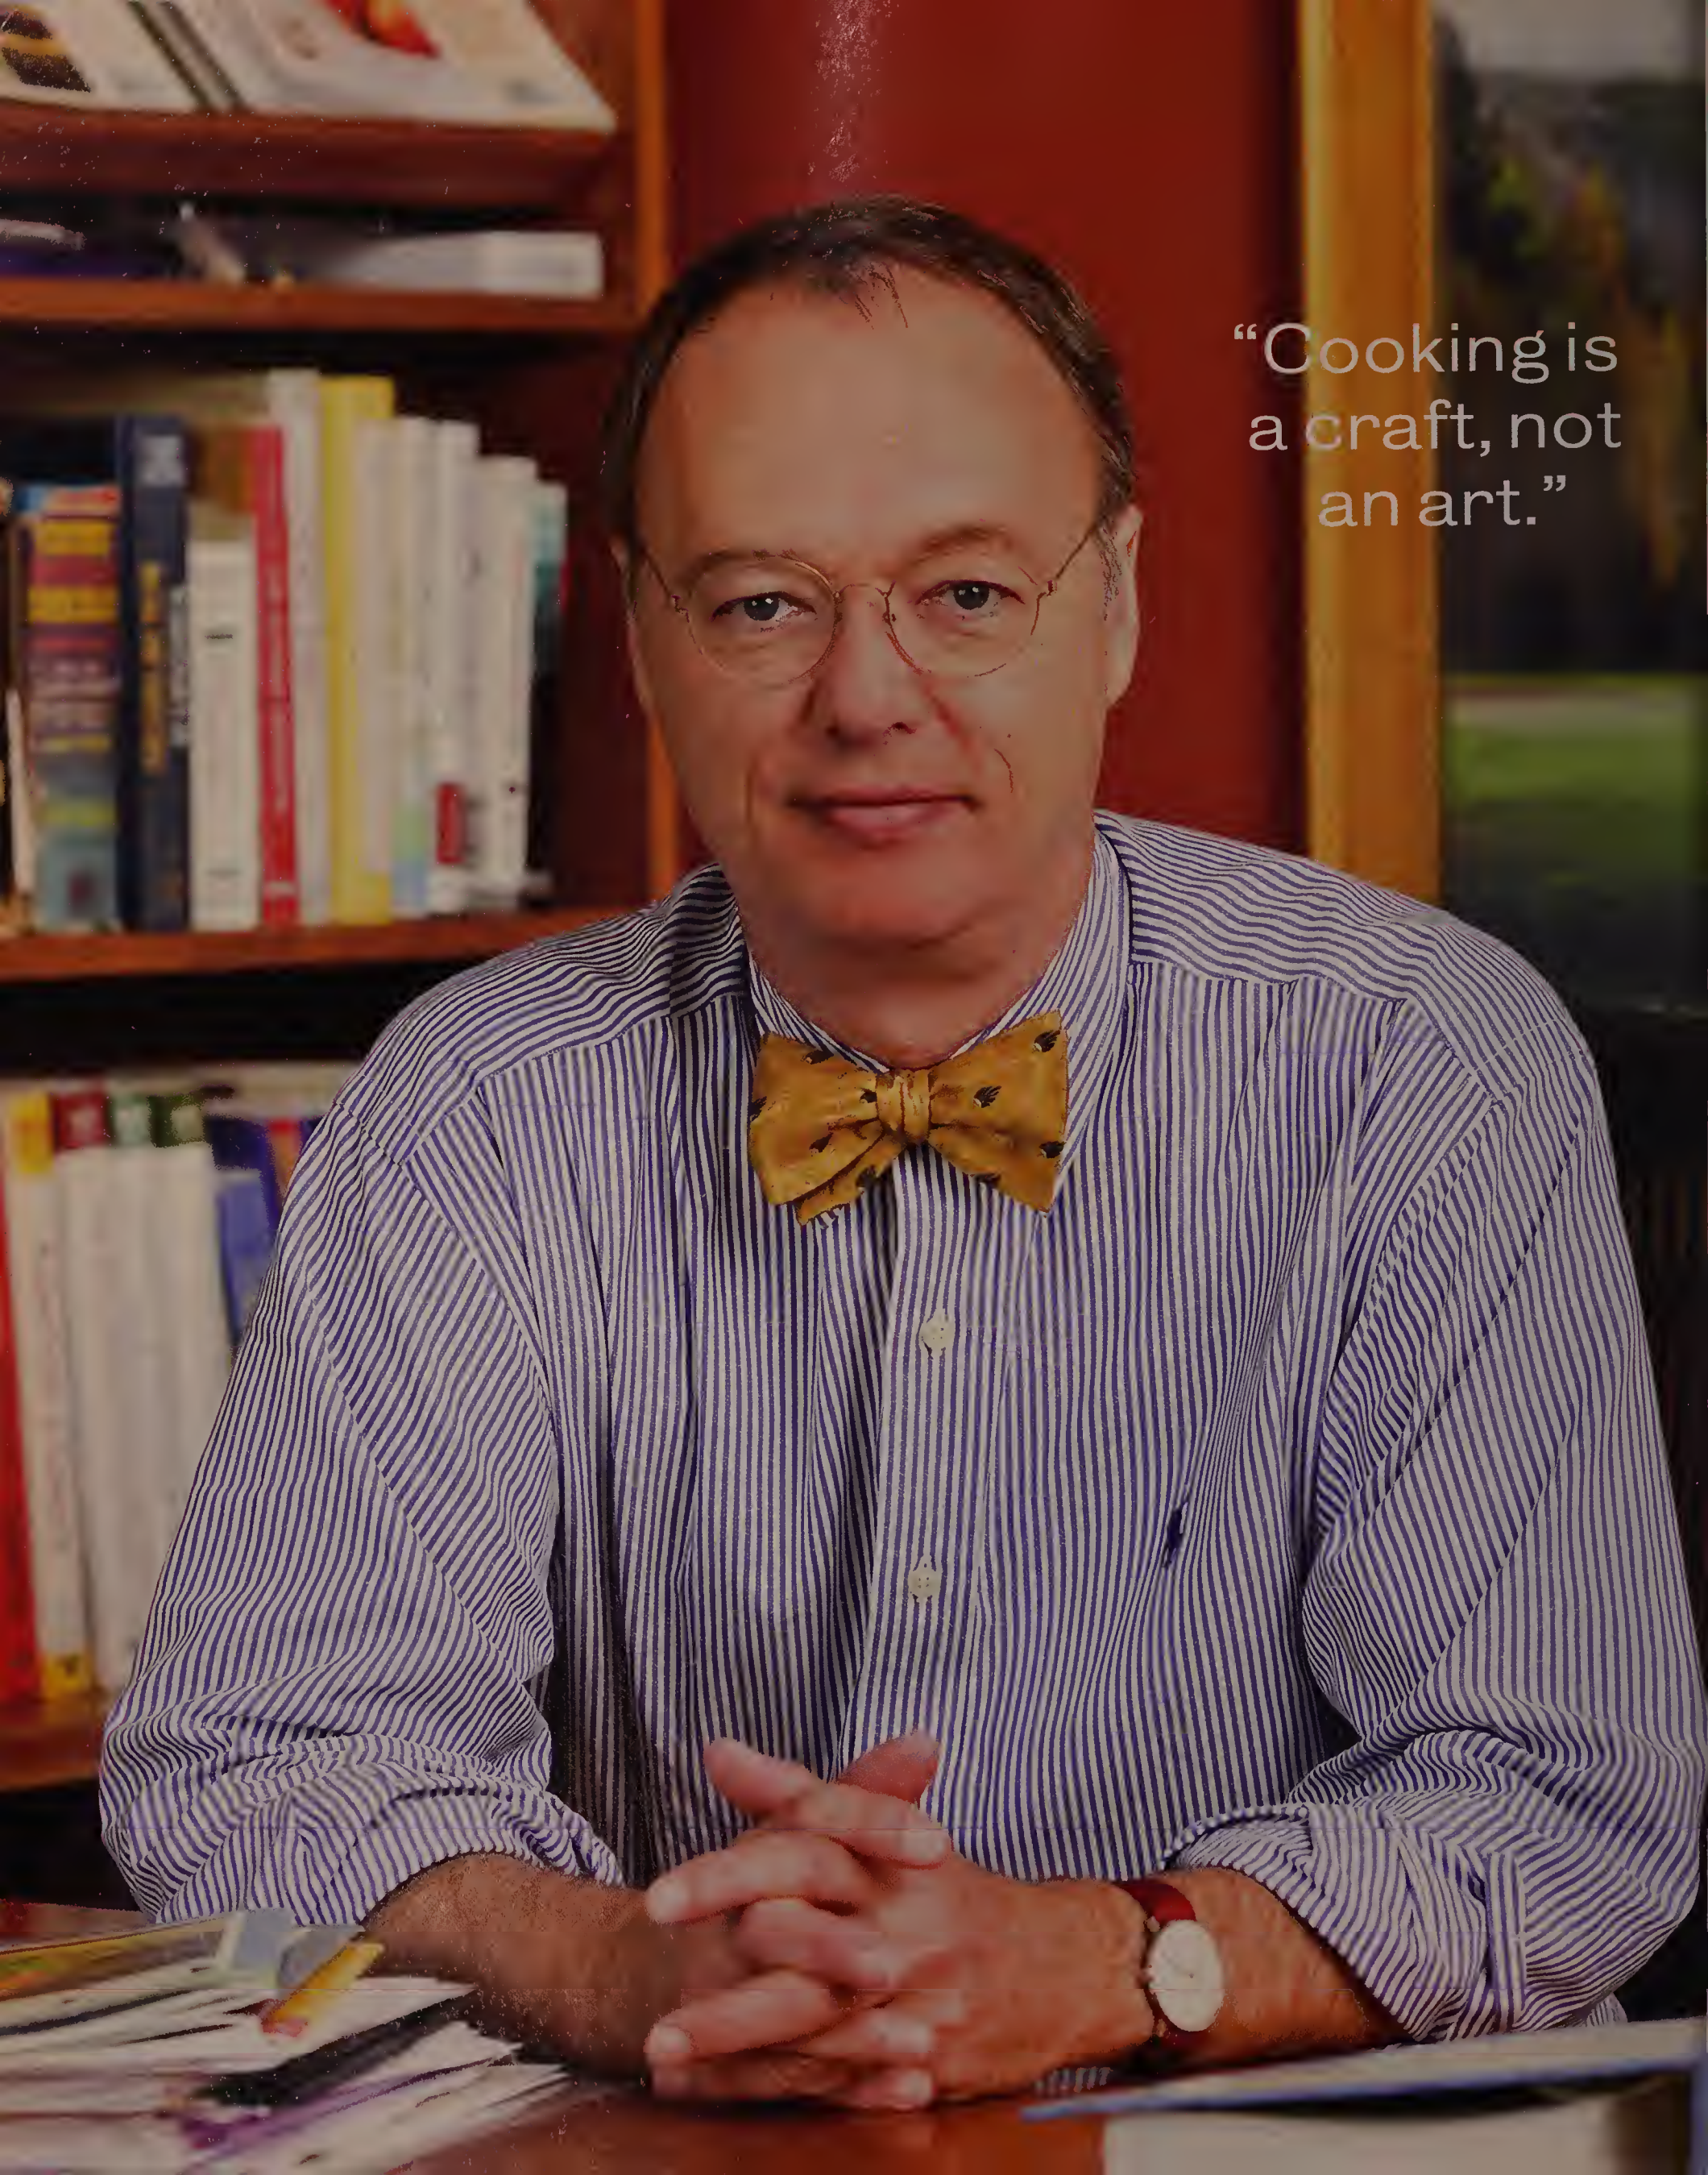
2 MEN OF MOVEMBER

Looooch After an awful start, Milan Lucic finally turned it on, and wouldn't you know it, the Bruins started winning. It's hard to believe Lucic's still only 23 (It feels like he's been here for 10 years), but there's no question the guy's a rock on the first line. Or at least he needs to be, otherwise, good luck distinguishing between the booos and the Loooches.

Tuukka Time In order to keep Thomas ready for the homestretch, Tuukka Rask must carry a heavier load. Or maybe just win a few games. After an 11-14 record last year, Rask has started this season 1-3. Even if it's not all his fault, something's got to change. For starters, the number of goals he gives up.

3 PATS PROBLEM CHILDREN



Farewell, Fat Albert He could've been the next Corey Dillon or Randy Moss, but instead he was the same old Albert Haynesworth. That's too bad, but not as bad as it could've been. Let's just be happy Belichick cut bait before Al snapped and did something really harmful, like eat Danny Woodhead.

Speaking of Mr. Moss As crazy as it sounds, I'm on board with bringing Randy back; I think he'd improve the offense. But here's the thing: Unless Moss can play D, he doesn't make the Pats a better team. (But it might be worth it for his blowout "Welcome Back" roller-skating party.)

And Speaking of the D The severity of Brandon Spikes' MCL injury is still unknown, but any time he misses will be painful for the Pats. You can't help but wonder what would happen if this guy could ever stay active, although, whether because of injury or off-the-field issues, it just hasn't happened. Hey, there's always Tracey White! (Drinks poison.)

an art.”

Soroff On CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The host of America's Test Kitchen talks about sex and food, shad roe and keeping it simple.

COOKING EXPERT CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL is the creator of Cook's Illustrated and Cook's Country magazines and the host of America's Test Kitchen on PBS, as well as its WGBH-FM radio counterpart. Born and raised in Westchester County, N.Y., he went to Phillips Exeter Academy and received a degree in primitive art from Columbia University. After working in the publishing field, he founded Cook's Magazine, which he subsequently sold. In 1993, he founded Cook's Illustrated—a magazine devoted to the trial-and-error method—and he has since authored several cookbooks, including The Cook's Bible, The Yellow Farmhouse Cookbook and The Dessert Bible, contributed to numerous publications and appeared on TV shows like Today and The Early Show. Kimball lives in Boston and southwestern Vermont.

Jonathan Soroff: What's the oddest thing you've ever done in the test kitchen?
Chris Kimball: You're not talking about personal interactions…

No. I mean the furthest lengths you've gone to in trying to perfect a recipe.
I'd say the thing we spent the most time on was fudge. It was three months. The guy who worked on the recipe developed rotator-cuff problems. We never published the recipe because it was never sufficiently reliable.

Do you ever not wear bow ties?
Yes. I wear them Monday through Thursday at work, but I do not wear them hunting, or to bed. I do wear them on book tours, because if I don't, people actually seem either disappointed or confused or treat me like I'm an impostor.

Favorite ethnic cuisine?
There's no such thing as ethnic anymore. So many cuisines are being cooked in the United States now, that phrase has become sort of meaningless. Curried goat in L.A.? That's not ethnic. It's just curried goat.

Most difficult regional cuisine to master?
The big problem with regional cuisines is that the staples—the larder, the pantry—just aren't here. If you want to cook Mexican food, you might need 20 different things the average Mexican household or cook would have at hand and that we can't really find here.

What about the fact that, say, Asian cooking generally relies on very high heat…
That's a good example of what I mean. A traditional wok makes perfect sense if you've got a ring of flame underneath and it's hotter than hell, but on an American stovetop, it's a joke. That's why woks in this country now look like skillets. They get flatter and wider every year.

Biggest mistake most home cooks make?
One is not having a sharp knife. No one knows how to sharpen a knife. And two, they're afraid of heat. When the skillet is 300 degrees instead of 450, the meat steams instead of browns; you don't get flavor development.

Favorite kitchen implement?
The $95 Thermapen meat thermometer. I can't cook without it. It tells you what's going on inside, and that's absolutely essential.

One dish you hate to cook?
I'd prefer to be shot than cook shad roe.

Do you have a seduction dish?
I actually think sex and food are unrelated. I don't quite get the connection, and I don't think food seduces. I think wine probably does, because it dulls the senses.

Yes, in a way, but I suppose it's similar to Vogue, because the clothes look great on a 19-year-old model who weighs 105 pounds. You put that same dress on your own fat ass, and it doesn't look as good. [Laughs.] So on the show, we always start with badly done food—and I wish we did it even more—to really make the point that no one is perfect. I'd like to take away that fear of failure by saying, "Everybody makes mistakes."

Do you eat out a lot?
I hardly do anymore, except when I travel. I tend to eat at home. I've sort of lost interest in the latest, greatest thing. I prefer simple foods.

Where do you most like to food shop?
Ideally, I'd love to go to farmers' markets or grow my own, which I do a bit. I do go to Whole Foods in Cambridge. Overall, they do a good job. But I'd vastly prefer a small store that specializes in one or two things.

How do you feel about food movements like locavore or head-to-tail?
I complain about everything, so I've probably criticized a lot of them. But in the sense that they've enabled small farmers to make a living, I appreciate them. I'm thrilled that there's an economy for the small farmer.

What's the single most underutilized spice?
Juniper berries. I love them.

Any trendy ingredient you're just sick of?
In this country, the most overused spice is cinnamon. Everyone uses gobs of it, and it ruins everything. I don't really like saffron so much. Cilantro's come and gone as a popular herb. Now it's probably an Indian mix of spices. But I think a lot of that has to do with the fact that the American palate has been trained, because of processed foods, to consume so much fat and salt and sugar. I think because of that, we crave overspiced foods.

Is cooking more of an art or a science?
It's not an art, and I think that's just annoying. Stuff like tomato lollipops are just an indication that the world has evolved enough that people can make a living doing stupid things. But it is a mark of advanced civilization. Cooking is a craft, not an art. It's meant to be eaten.

Who's your cooking idol or mentor?
Julia Child was curious, and so is Martha Stewart. I like both of them tremendously. But maybe unlike Martha, Julia was curious about people as well as cooking. Even at age 83, she was trying to learn. That's pretty amazing.

Will you come to my house for dinner?
Sure! That's the first invitation I've gotten—aside from Vermonters who just don't give a s who you are—that I've received in Boston in a long time. Just don't make it complicated. Keep it simple. ×××

Rabe in Arms

For a simple, but tasty, vegan dish, try Chris Cooper's mother-in-law's recipe for broccoli rabe.

Chris Cooper

ACTOR

"I grew up in a home where every recipe started with 'Open a can of...' and salad was green Jell-O with Miracle Whip and suspended fruit. This is my wife Marianne's mother's recipe for broccoli rabe—and, no, it's not why I married her. But it's one of the reasons."

MAMA LEONE'S BROCCOLI RABE

INGREDIENTS

1	head broccoli rabe
5	cloves garlic, unpeeled
6-7	small red skin potatoes, quartered
	olive oil
	red pepper flakes
	salt and pepper

PREPARATION

1. Preheat oven to 370 degrees.
2. Place garlic on a baking sheet. Drizzle with olive oil and roast in oven for 15 minutes. When cool, peel and discard skins.
3. Wash the broccoli rabe and trim the stems up to the leaves.
4. Place in a steamer until wilted.
5. Parboil unpeeled potatoes.
6. Drain the potatoes and saute in an iron skillet with olive oil until brown.
7. Add the roasted garlic and steamed broccoli rabe.
8. Drizzle more olive oil if needed. Add red pepper flakes, salt and pepper to taste.

WILFORK STICKY CHICKEN FOR A LARGE CROWD

INGREDIENTS

2	family packs of chicken drumsticks
1	46 oz. can of pineapple juice
1	15 oz. bottle of teriyaki sauce
2 cups	brown sugar
1 cup	ketchup
½ cup	honey

PREPARATION

1. Preheat oven to 350–375 degrees.
2. Combine all the ingredients (except the chicken) in a large pot on medium-low heat, stirring frequently so that all the brown sugar dissolves.
3. While the mixture is heating, wash the chicken and arrange in a large, oven-safe pan. Arrange drumsticks one up, one down to maximize space.
4. Once the mixture blends together, pour the hot liquid over the chicken.
5. Place the pan in the oven uncovered. Rotate the pan after 30 minutes. The chicken will be done in about an hour, when it's easily pulled from the bone.
6. Serve the chicken with the juices over your choice of rice.

BAKED EGGPLANT WITH ONIONS

INGREDIENTS

2	large eggplants
4	large onions, cut lengthwise
1	15 oz. can of diced tomatoes
1 cup	chopped parsley
¼ cup	olive oil
2 tbsp.	chopped garlic
2	bay leaves
	salt and pepper

PREPARATION

1. Preheat oven to 375 degrees.
2. In a large pan, cover the eggplants with oil and roast in oven for 20 minutes, until the juices start to dry.
3. Saute the onions in a skillet with oil until soft.
4. Add garlic, salt, pepper, bay leaves and tomatoes. Cook for an additional 5–10 minutes.
5. Stir in parsley.
6. Pour the sauce over the eggplant and bake for 20 minutes at 350 degrees.

PANKO-PESTO STRIPED BASS

INGREDIENTS

1	striped bass filet, preferably skinned
1 cup	sun-dried tomato pesto
1 cup	basil pesto
6 oz.	panko breadcrumbs
	salt
	nonstick spray

PREPARATION

1. Preheat oven to 450 degrees.
2. Coat several layers of tinfoil with nonstick spray and lay the bass filet on them, flat and diagonally.
3. In a separate bowl, combine the pestos with panko and mix to a uniform consistency.
4. Roll up the sides of the tin foil to hold in the liquid and crumbs.
5. Salt the fish and cover with pesto/panko mixture, up to several inches thick.
6. Bake until brown on top.
7. Lower oven to 350 degrees and bake for an additional 25 minutes.

HALIBUT IN PARCHMENT WITH COCONUT RICE

INGREDIENTS

4	halibut fillets
¾ lb	asparagus, cut into pieces
¼ lb	snap peas
¾ cup	canned coconut milk (not low-fat)
½ cup	basmati rice
¼ cup	chopped cilantro
3 tbsp.	slivered almonds
¾ tsp.	red curry paste
¾ tsp.	kosher salt
¼ tsp.	pepper
	lime wedges

PREPARATION

1. Preheat oven to 400 degrees.
2. In a small bowl, whisk the curry paste with the coconut milk.
3. Pour ½ cup of the sauce into another bowl and set aside.
4. Toast the almonds in a small pan over medium heat until golden (roughly 3 minutes).
5. Stir in the rice, ½ cup of the sauce, ½ cup of water, the coconut milk and a ½ tsp. of salt.
6. Bring to a boil, then reduce heat.
7. Simmer, covered, until rice is tender (about 17 minutes).
8. While the rice is cooking, sprinkle the remaining ¼ tsp. of salt and pepper on the halibut.
9. Cut four pieces of parchment paper into 12x14-inch rectangles.
10. Set a fillet in the center of each and divide asparagus and peas on top.
11. Fold opposite sides of parchment over ingredients and then fold several times to seal.
12. Place packets, folded side up, on a baking sheet.
13. Bake until fish is just cooked through (12–15 minutes).
14. Microwave remaining sauce to warm.
15. Divide rice among four plates. Top each with fish and vegetables from packet.
16. Spoon sauce over dishes and sprinkle with cilantro.
17. Serve with lime wedges.

COCA-COLA JERKED BRISKET OR RIBS

INGREDIENTS

1	beef brisket or rack of ribs
2 liters	Coca-Cola (to cover the meat)
1/6 lb.	ginger
3 cloves	of garlic
¾ cup	dark rum
¼ cup	brown sugar (plus more for sprinkling)
½	lime
¼ tbsp.	cilantro, minced
½ tsp.	cayenne pepper
½ tsp.	cinnamon
½ tsp.	allspice
½ tsp.	kosher salt
½ tsp.	fresh ground nutmeg
2 dashes	soy sauce
	olive oil
	butter

PREPARATION

1. Brown the brisket or ribs in olive oil, butter, garlic and sliced ginger in a Dutch oven.
2. Pour Coca-Cola over meat until covered and add the remaining ingredients.
3. Braise on medium heat with lid closed tightly for at least 1 ½ hours.
4. Remove the meat, place in another pan, sprinkle brown sugar on top, and add a bit of the braising liquid.
5. Place in the oven and broil until bubbly and brown (2–5 minutes).
6. Remove from oven and tent with foil.
7. Reduce braising liquid in a saucepan until thickened—about 30 minutes on medium heat.
8. Slice, and serve with strained sauce on top or on the side in a gravy boat.

INDONESIAN PORK TENDERLOIN

INGREDIENTS

1	1 lb. pork tenderloin
2 cloves	of garlic, minced
½ cup	apricot, onion, peach, or pineapple preserves (I prefer to use half onion and half apricot)
2 tbsp.	soy sauce
2 tbsp.	peanut butter (you can also use almond or cashew butter, or finely ground peanuts, almonds or cashews, with a little peanut oil to create a paste)
1 tsp.	Asian chili garlic sauce (or substitute 1 tsp. red pepper flakes)

PREPARATION

1. Preheat oven to 375 degrees.
2. Trim fat from the tenderloin.
3. Combine soy sauce, peanut butter, red pepper and garlic in a small bowl, and stir well.
4. Spread mixture over tenderloin in a greased pan.
5. Bake uncovered for 30 minutes.
6. Brush tenderloin with preserves and bake an additional 10 minutes or until meat thermometer reads 150–160 degrees, basting often with preserves.
7. Let stand 10 minutes before carving.

1 ⅓ cups	sugar
1 cup	butter
⅔ cup	orange juice
4 tsp.	baking powder
1 tsp.	grated orange rind

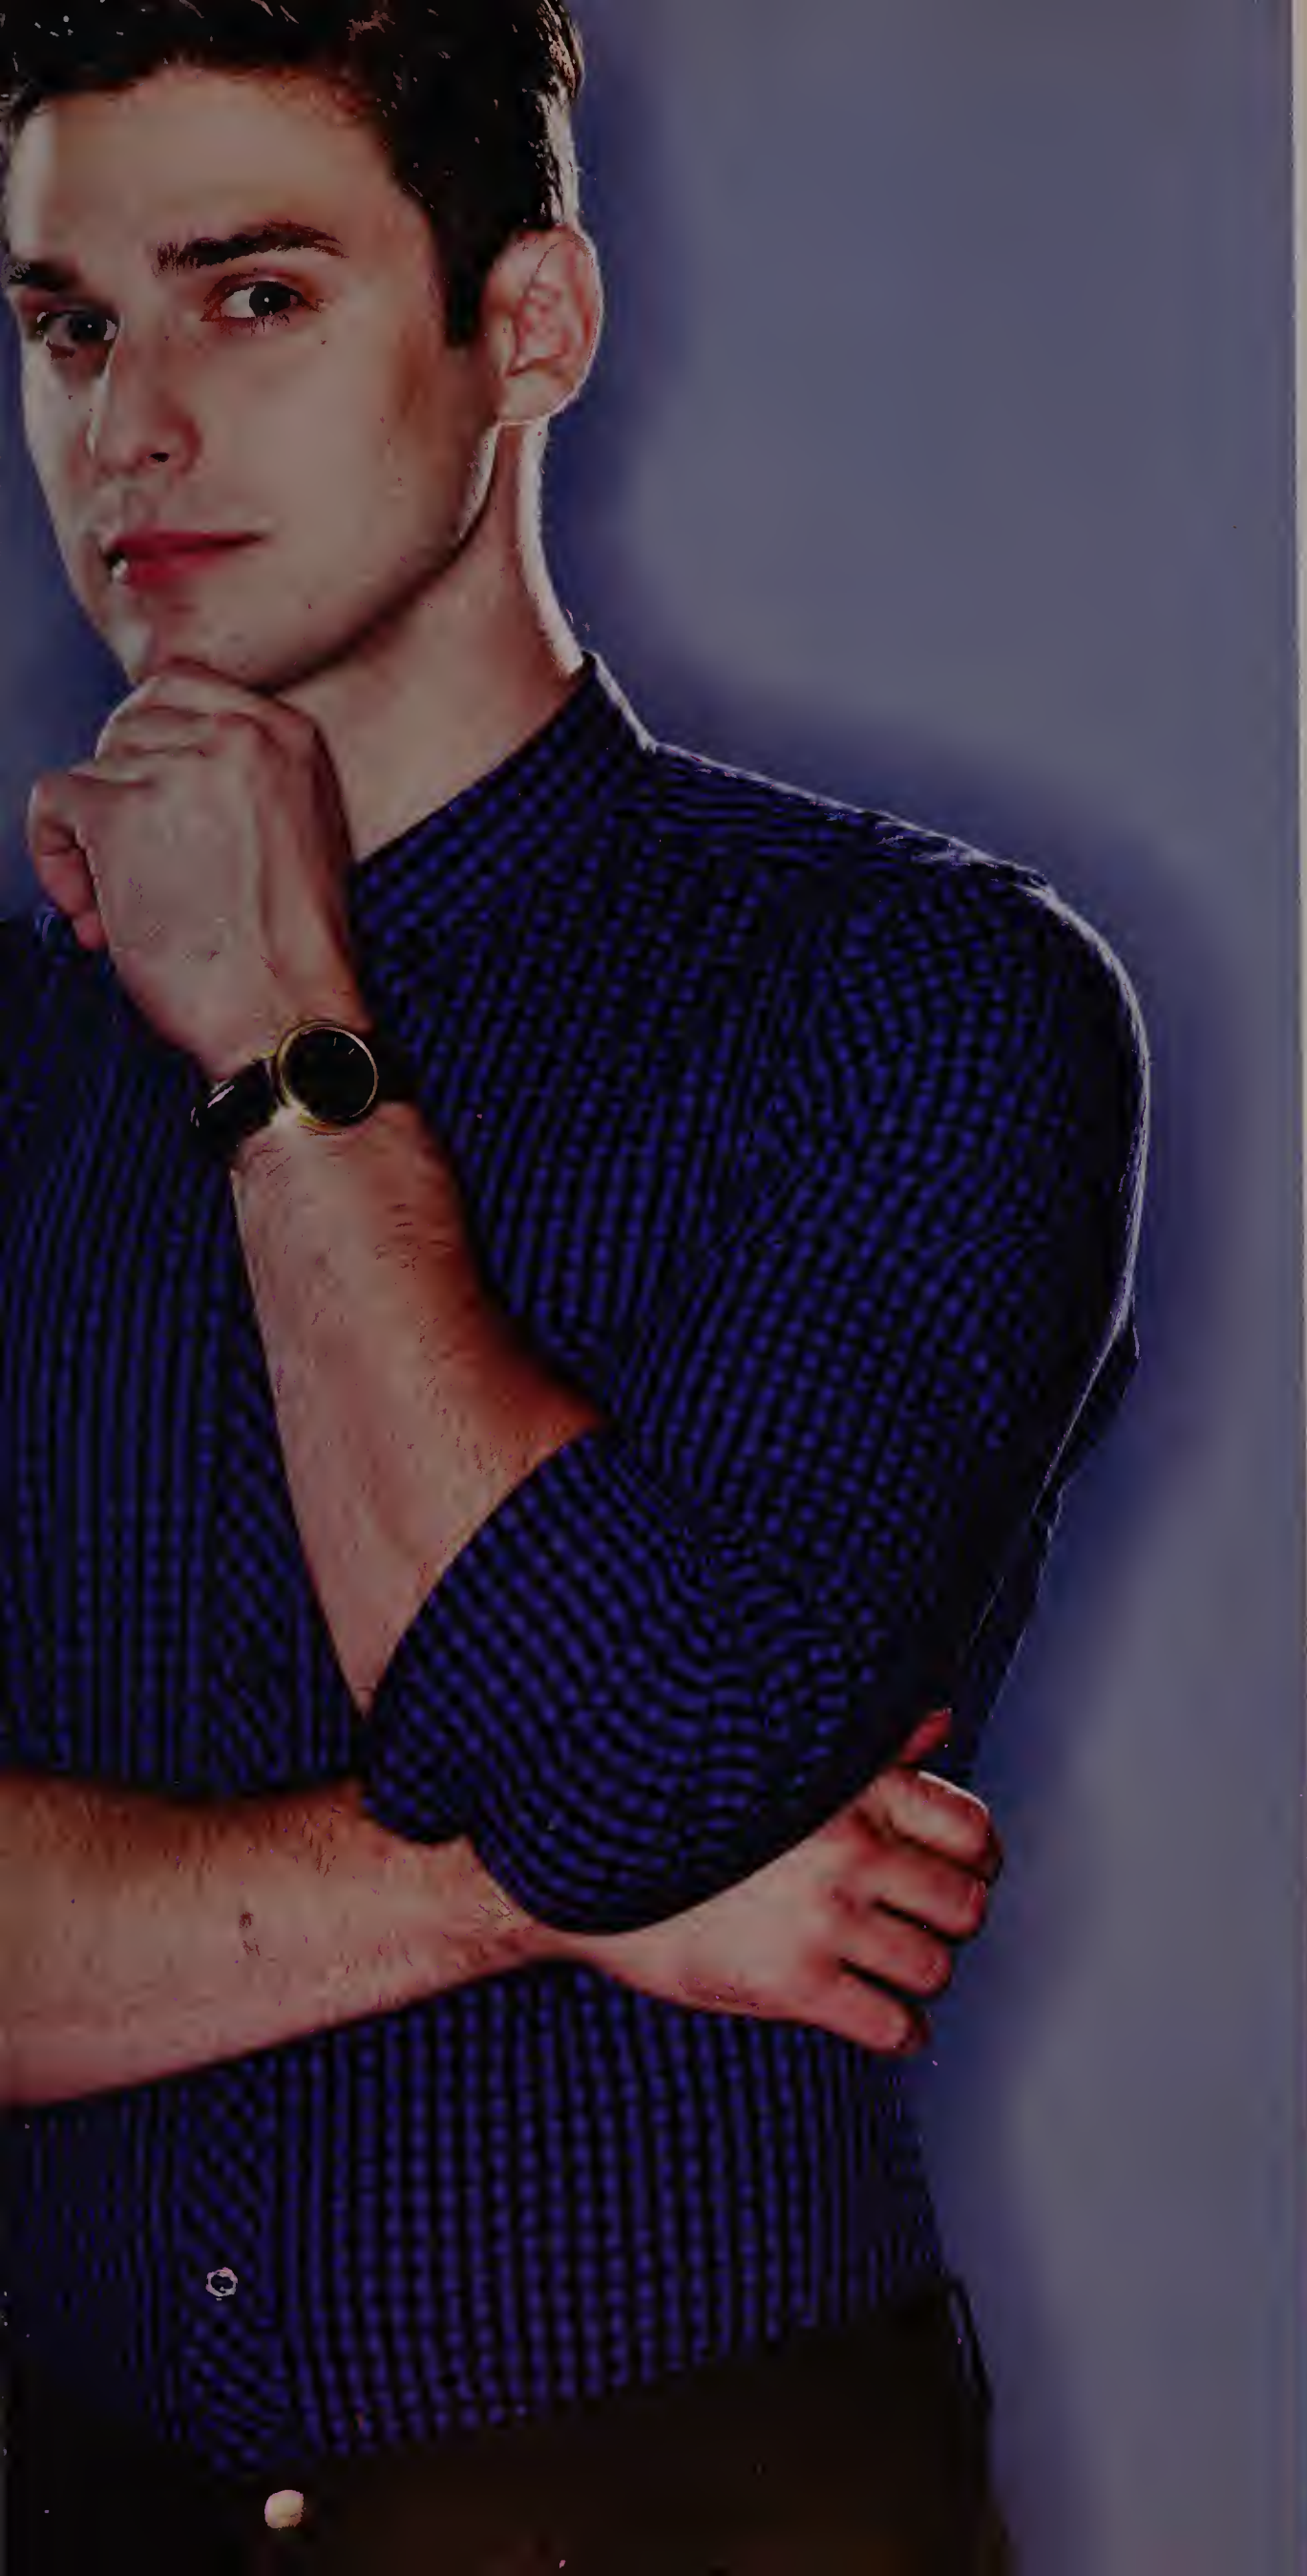
PREPARATION



1. Preheat oven to 350 degrees.
2. Mix together butter and sugar.
3. Sift together flour, baking powder and salt.
4. Combine wet and dry ingredients.
5. Add orange juice and beat well.
6. Toss blueberries in 2 tbsp. flour.
7. Add grated orange rind and fold gently into the mix.
8. Pour into lined cupcake tin and sprinkle with sugar.
9. Bake for 25–30 minutes.

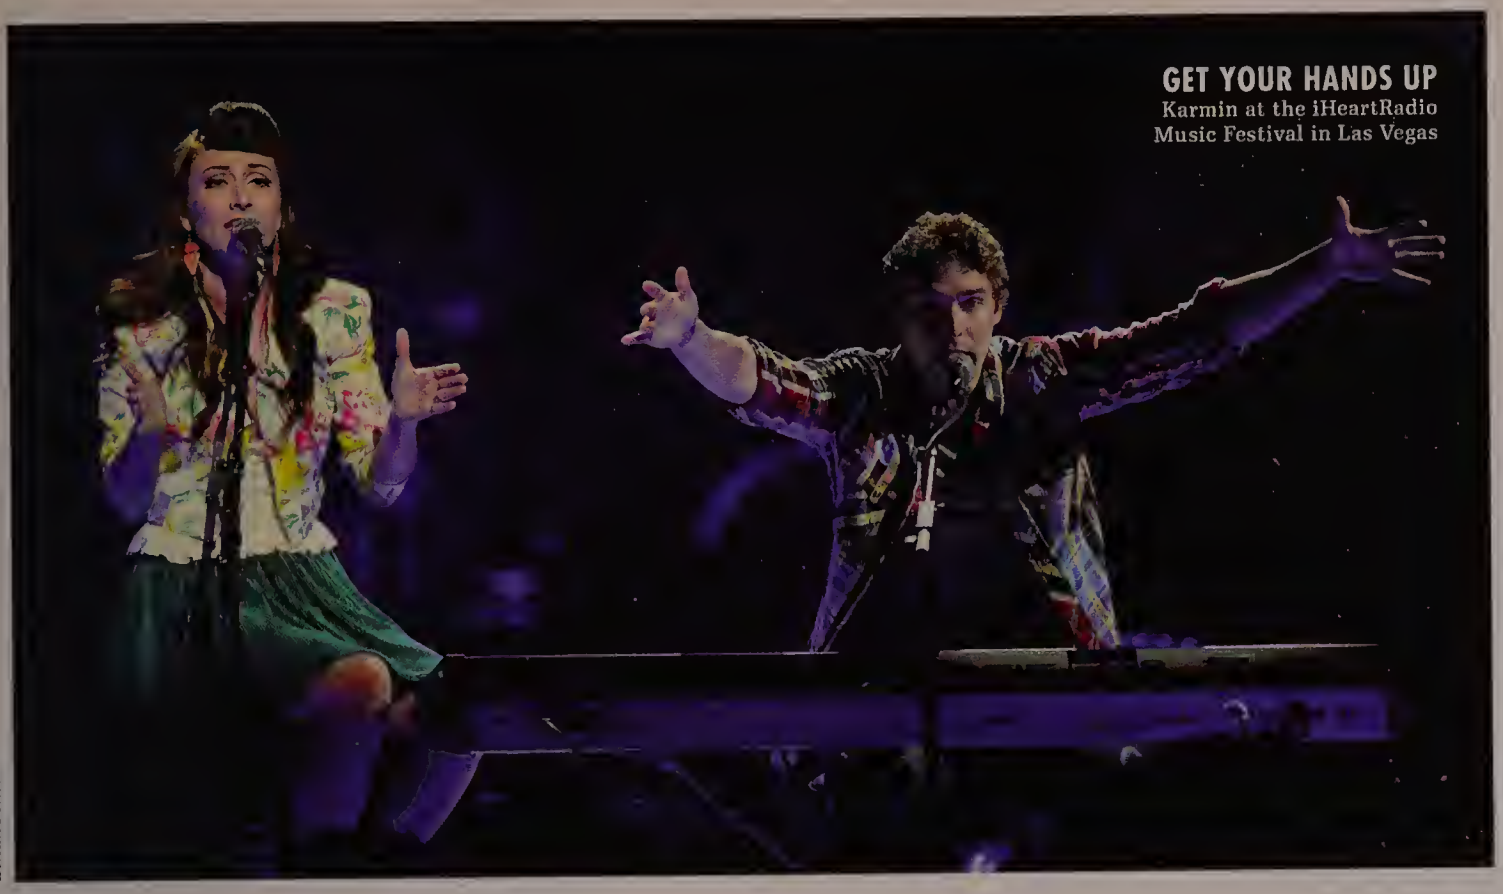
NOTORIETY IS FLEETING. BUT IN THE POST-BIEBER MUSIC INDUSTRY, SEARCHING YOUTUBE IS NOW THE STANDARD FOR FINDING THE NEXT BIG THING.*



Hair styling: Katsumi Matsuo for Redken; makeup: Asami Taguchi at L'Atelier NYC; wardobe styling: Kelly Brown. On Heidemann: scarf and pants by ISSA, necklace worn as belt by Tuleste, tank is Noonan's. On Noonan: shirt by Ben Sherman, pants by Carlos Campos, watch is Noonan's own.

This time last year, singer Amy Heidemann was trying to make ends meet by belting out standards like "Single Ladies" and "Into the Groove" with a wedding band called Kahootz. Her boyfriend, Nick Noonan, a trombone major she met at Berklee College of Music, worked at the Ring Boxing Club on Comm. Ave. In their spare time they were Karmin (a mash-up of "karma" and the Latin word for song), a fledging duo that had only just started to upload quirky pop covers to YouTube. Under the advisement of their friend Nils Gums, a fellow alum whose Raw Session YouTube channel helped other artists establish a presence on the Web, they stuck to a strict schedule of two covers per week, plus one original song. "One of the most important things is being extremely active with your audience," says Gums. "You never know what's going to hit."

For Karmin, that hit was their cover of Chris Brown's "Look at Me Now." Posted in April, Heidemann's quickfire rip through the rap sensation landed on RyanSeacrest.com, pulling in millions of viewers. "I never thought I'd rap publicly," the 25-year-old laughs. Heidemann wasn't allowed to listen to hip-hop growing up in a conservative home in Nebraska, so she discovered the talent accidentally. "I would just do it for fun, but I really could do it. It's something I'm serious about."

Just over a week later, they were performing on The Ellen DeGeneres Show. "We fantasized about this for a long time, and then it happened so much faster than we anticipated," she says. Noonan adds, "I knew we had something special, but we couldn't have predicted this." Headier success followed almost immediately when, in May, the NBA selected "Take It Away," an original song, as the theme for the Finals.

Their rise caught the eye of major label legend L.A. Reid, judge of The X Factor and producer for acts like Mariah Carey, Kanye West and Rihanna. Seeing the potential in their original content, he engineered a deal that would bring the duo to Epic Records. "I couldn't believe that he was on the phone, that it was happening," Heidemann remembers. "I called Nick and he came rushing home and I ran outside crying. We rolled around in the middle of Beacon Street."

"He just kept saying that he was hungry for something new," Noonan says. "No one really knew what our sound was, but he saw something in us." Reid has taken a hands-on role, which is encouraging for the first-time recording artists. "He has something to prove," says Gums, who now manages the band in Los Angeles. "He's very invested in their success."

KARMIN'S STORY IS A Web-enabled fairy-tale-come-true, but transitioning from YouTube stardom to Top 40 phenom raises another challenge. How does a band best-known for covers (their personal favorites include Lil Wayne's "6 Foot 7 Foot" and Nicki Minaj's "Super Bass") establish an original identity without confusing fans? Part of Karmin's appeal was the spin they gave each rehashed song. "We call it Karmin-izing," says Noonan. They pared down arrangements so that they featured little more than vocals, a keyboard, Heidemann on acoustic guitar and Noonan on cajón or trombone. "People recognized our sound, and it was unique."

The key idea was to avoid karaoke-style kitsch. A similar formula worked for 14-year-old Greyson Chance, whose piano-heavy rendition of Lady Gaga's "Paparazzi" went viral in 2010, leading to an album on the record label Elevenelleven, Ellen DeGeneres' imprint on Interscope. DeGeneres has filled her label with young talent cut from Karmin's cloth, most recently adding Berklee students Charlie Puth and Emily Luther to the roster. Having never performed together before, they recorded a cover of Adele's "Someone Like You" as an entry into a Perez Hilton singing competition. Puth, 19, meticulously reworked the ballad to incorporate intricate harmonies suggestive of country music. It won the competition and has since been viewed by more than 3.7 million people. "What YouTube does is make music accessible," he says. "It's flipped the industry and united content creators and people. For the first time, people are deciding what's popular."

But what's a popular free viewing on YouTube may not translate to actual sales. Karmin's hoping to repeat their viral success with their debut professional single, "Crash Your Party." It's an exuberant, radio-friendly track reminiscent of P!nk's earlier work (when she, too, was under the tutelage of Reid). Produced by hip-hop heavyweights the Runners and sampling Black Sheep's classic "The Choice Is Yours (Revisited)," it's a quintessential piece of the genre the duo calls "swag-pop"—a free-spirited pop-R&B hybrid they're helping to define. "It felt like a great introduction for people who may not have heard us before," Heidemann says.

The other songs on the album, due for a February 2012 release, mix what's known with what's new. With a blazing rap and pop hook, "I Told You So" pays homage to the Chris Brown hit that launched Karmin's career. Other tracks are less flippant, like "Brokenhearted," which gets a jolt of angst from Katy Perry hitmaker Dr. Luke.

Pop music is, of course, a serious business. Noonan and Heidemann know that the pressure to succeed might carry a personal cost. Having dated for six years, they got engaged last December, but they've already had to postpone their wedding. "We were booked for some final recording sessions that day," Heidemann says. "There's just so much going on right now. We'll get there." Noonan also thinks they'll elude the stereotypical pop-star relationship dangers. "I just feel lucky to be able to experience this with Amy." Perhaps that's because they're comfortable in their very different roles. Noonan is happy playing the goofy hipster to Heidemann's suicide-roll-sporting pinup. She likes to scour vintage stores and create YouTube hair tutorials. "I just get a haircut," Noonan quips.

Despite their evident pleasure in having made it this far, 150 million hits doesn't ensure a Bieber-esque future. Take the cautionary example of Rebecca Black, a viral sensation now relegated to cultural infamy as a cruel, mostly forgotten joke. Of course, Gums thinks they can weather the transition. They have personality. They have skills. Plus, he adds, "Nick and Amy are real musicians."

Real musicians whose reputation is built on others' songwriting. Recognizing this, there have been talks of including one or two covers as album bonus tracks. "We'd never abandon them completely," Noonan says. "They're fun and they get people excited." Their most recent YouTube cover is a throwback to TLC's "No Scrubs," and has currently clocked more than a million hits. But now the focus is on the original, with work beginning on a music video to accompany their first single. "We aren't completely sure of the concept yet," says Heidemann, "but we want to tie in our past somehow."

One idea is to open the scene in their shabby, old living room, then pan away to reveal Karmin's glitzier, current lifestyle. And there's no doubt the first place you'll find it is YouTube. ×××

STYLE PROFILE / by Alexandra Hall

"Shopping's my addiction. I work on Newbury Street, and am on a first-name basis with most salespeople."

"If you 'like' stores on Facebook, you can get notices for sales. That's how I've gotten some of my best deals."

"Most people get scammed on Black Friday because they don't know that stores actually decrease their sale percentages and bring in old stock."

"I've been collecting vintage Gucci watches; my current favorite is one from the '70s."

E-mail nominations to style@improper.com. For more photos, go to improper.com.

"Black blazers are the best—you can throw them on for lunch and completely change an outfit."

"My family thinks I'm crazy for buying so many coats and blazers. I have a closet full of them, and I started wearing them way before the Kardashians."

"I've always taken shoes seriously. In grade school, I was the only kid who didn't play soccer. I'd sit on the grass, watch and say, 'Sorry, but there's no way I'm putting on cleats.'"

Embrace the Dark Side

IMMORALITY PLAY

IT'S A TROPE THAT BEING tricked is entertaining. Club Oberon now devotes a night to celebrating the thrill of misbehavior with VaudeVillainy, a circus show centered on the idea that evil has a bright side. Dressed as goons, mad scientists and famous monsters, members of the Boston Circus Guild perform daring aerial displays, juggling acts and acrobatics to a live sound track from Emperor Norton's Stationary Marching Band, while hosts Johnny Blazes and Madge of Honor emcee the nefarious proceedings. It's a one-night-only wallow in infamy on Nov. 17. COURTNEY CARTER

VaudeVillainy Nov. 17, $18–$24, at Oberon, 2 Arrow St., Cambridge (617-496-8004) cluboberon.com.

50/50 ★★★ The prospect of dying young is no laughing matter, but in the case of 50/50, it makes for an extremely awkward, heartfelt and funny film. Directed by Jonathan Levine and written by Will Reiser, it has the rough sting of real life at its (slightly compromised) core. Reiser was diagnosed with a rare form of cancer in his early 20s. His loyal best friend during the ordeal was the kind of slovenly loudmouth usually played in movies by Seth Rogen. Except Reiser's best friend really is Seth Rogen, who always seems to turn up in movies as a variation of himself anyway. Joseph Gordon-Levitt stars here, and 50/50 is great at letting him and the other up-and-coming movie stars in the cast play to their strengths. The movie gets better as it goes along. "Did you ever see Terms of Endearment?" Gordon-Levitt asks at one point. The shaggy, laughing-through-the-tears M.O. of James L. Brooks' cable classic is obviously what 50/50 is striving for. Half the time it even gets there. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Footloose ★★ You're probably wondering, "Why?" The answer is beside the point if you find yourself in line for director Craig Brewer's exuberant rehash of the silly 1984 musical. Original screenwriter Dean Pitchford is credited here, presumably because nobody even bothered changing most of the dialogue. It's the same movie with better dancing and worse acting. Much worse. Local boy Kenny Wormald stars as Ren McCormack, an out-of-town troublemaker new to the stuffy town of Bomont, where teenage dancing is a crime. Dennis Quaid takes over John Lithgow's role as the over-protective pastor, but how I wish they could've persuaded Kevin Bacon to take the part. Dancing With the Stars' Julianne Hough, who doesn't look a day under 30, plays the preacher's rebellious teenage daughter, and, once again, we spend a lot of time worrying about whether or not these kids will be allowed to have a prom. Mysteriously time-warped with popped collars and skinny ties, it's high energy, low-impact fluff. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Guard ★★★ ½ Suffused with a strain of romantic Irish fatalism, writer/director John Michael McDonagh's debut plunders the clichés of a thousand interracial buddy-cop comedies, emerging with an ode to shabby nobility that's stranger and sadder than expected. It's also fookin' hilarious—or at least that's how Sergeant Gerry Boyle might describe it. Played by Brendan Gleeson in one of the great performances of his career. Boyle's a steely-eyed lout, whiling away the hours in a state of perpetual boredom and wasted disappointment, punctuated by occasional visits from Dublin prostitutes. But when a gang of English cocaine traffickers arrive in town, so does a smooth-talking Southern dandy from the FBI (Don Cheadle, master of the reaction shot). Turns out that, like a plus-sized version of every great Humphrey Bogart and Clint Eastwood character, there's a strict moral code lurking somewhere beneath Boyle's anti-social dissolution. The Guard is raw, profane and strangely moving. (At West Newton Cinema.)

The Help ★★ This surprise smash is being enjoyed by an audience that has gone sadly underserved by the months-long barrage of superheroes and giant robots that typically define summer entertainment. On one hand, we should rejoice, as this is a female-driven picture with no special effects. But it's a troubling film all the same. Based on Kathryn Stockett's best seller, The Help takes place in Jackson, Miss., circa 1962, when audience surrogate Skeeter Phelan (Emma Stone) returns home to her family's plantation and has an ideological falling-out with her well-to-do childhood friends over their nasty racist behavior. The slightly icky wish-fulfillment fantasy allows white audiences to rally around Skeeter's do-gooder activism while rendering her peers as cartoon monsters. It's a very pleasant lie, sending you out of the cinema on a high note. But what vexes me is why the lie even needed to be told in the first place. Aren't there enough true stories of heroism from the civil rights era? Is it really appropriate for us to all stand and applaud this courageous, fictional white girl? (In the suburbs.)

DAMN HOOVER

Leonardo DiCaprio simply tries too hard.

J. Edgar ★½
Starring Leonardo DiCaprio, Armie Hammer, Naomi Watts and Judi Dench. Screenplay by Dustin Lance Black. Directed by Clint Eastwood. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

THE WORST THING ABOUT having heroes is that they always let you down. Clint Eastwood has always seemed like a good role model. He's my favorite director and a stubborn man's man, doing things his own way. But after watching J. Edgar, I'm beginning to think that might not always be the best approach.

This is an excruciating film, and, at well over two hours, it's almost impossible to sit through. DiCaprio takes the part of the grumpy, homuncular Hoover too seriously. This might be his downfall.

DiCaprio is a movie star who desperately wants to be a character actor. Unfortunately, he just can't cut it. The kid has a smirky charisma that he's constantly hiding under a bushel. At his best, there's nobody better at forging a conspiratorial relationship with the audience. At worst, DiCaprio feels like a kid playing dress-up in a school play.

And no movie feels more like a school play than J. Edgar, with Dustin Lance Black's screenplay skipping along the decades allowing Hoover to outfox presidents from Roosevelt to Nixon with his newfangled Federal Bureau of Investigation and its secret files.

It's a great story, and in many ways J. Edgar Hoover is the classic Eastwood character we've been watching since before Dirty Harry. He's a principled fellow who lets his unwavering workaholic tendencies and private codes destroy his personal life, until moral gray areas blur into darkness. This is the same movie Eastwood has made 40-odd times over the past several decades.

Except this one is terrible.

Swathed in horrible old-age makeup for the majority of J. Edgar's running time, DiCaprio rants and raves to a collection of biographers, providing lazy narration where none is required. (Remember how Eastwood's amazing back-to-back biopics Bird and White Hunter Black Heart didn't need explanation?)

This closeted, ham-fisted Hoover is a chore to spend time with (as his real life counterpart probably was), and I endured most of J. Edgar just wishing to get away from him. There's no outside perspective, no relief from his drama queen shenanigans.

Burdened with a Freudian clump of mother issues thanks to a Mommie Dearest turn by Judi Dench, the stuttering Hoover invents library-card catalogs and revolutionizes crime-fighting techniques across the land. Dame Judi tells him that isn't enough, so he eventually tries on her nightgowns.

Enter Clyde Tolson. Played by The Social Network's Winkelvii Armie Hammer as a flighty queen of the FBI, the two pledge to have lunch and dinner together every day for the rest of their lives. I'm sorry, but the sight of two handsome 30-something actors crushed under absurd makeup having an elderly kiss-fight was the point for me when the picture teetered into camp.

It's a deeply silly movie; American history as kitsch, played out like a drag show. Lindbergh baby, check. Kennedy assignations and assassination, check. And let's not even get into Hoover's racist, possibly psychotic obsessions with Martin Luther King Jr.'s sex life, because the movie covers that, too.

Eastwood brings out some of the worst one-note celebrity impersonators I've ever seen. Bobby Kennedy is just as bad as Shirley Temple, but if you think they're laughable, just wait until Richard Milhous Nixon rears his ugly head.

I stayed up all night trying to fathom how this picture went so wrong. In the end, I just don't think Eastwood is good at grandeur. His best movies follow a sparse handful of characters over a very short time period. He doesn't seem to know what to do with production values and is really bad with crowds.

Despite his newfound prestige with the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, Eastwood shoots best going lowbrow, from the gut. This is why Letters From Iwo Jima was so much better than Flags of Our Fathers, and Gran Torino way more rewarding than Changeling.

He needs to stop being so goddamn respectable. ✖✖✖

The Ides of March ★★★ Adapted by George Clooney, Grant Heslov and Beau Willimon from Willimon's off-Broadway play, The Ides of March stars Ryan Gosling as a suave Washington, D.C., up-and-comer working on a hotly contested primary campaign for Clooney's too-good-to-be-true contender. Solid, if a little stuffy, the film works best when it sticks with the day-to-day grind of a life in politics: stump speeches, poll numbers, TV spots and the right way to spin a story. Playing the Democratic wet dream of a candidate, Clooney can't resist laying out his own personal talking points on a variety of current issues. (I'd probably vote for him.) So why is this finely crafted, well-acted movie almost impossible to get excited about? For starters, the idea of corruption in politics is no great shakes. But I also think Clooney's clipped professionalism behind the camera might be to blame. The scene work is tight, concise and fully functional. Lean and no-nonsense, even during the more lurid second half, it ultimately feels smaller than it should. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Like Crazy ★ There's an oft-quoted axiom I wish more young writers would heed: Just because it happened to you, doesn't make it interesting. Director Drake Doremus' semi-autobiographical tale of young lovers torn apart by immigration laws is as excruciating to sit through as anything I've seen this year. Anton Yelchin and Felicity Jones star as two dull college kids who fall in love during a bunch of montages and never come up with anything to say to each other. He designs furniture and has a thing about chairs. She's British. There endeth the character development. She stupidly overstays her visa, and then is shocked to find that this presents a problem when she attempts to return. Instead of doing anything sensible like allowing her rich family to intervene, the two instead mope on separate continents, texting each other while listening to sad music. The shockingly poor digital photography looks like it was shot on a 15-year-old camcorder, and I can't for the life of me figure out how this got released. (At Kendall Square.)

Margin Call ★★★ Sympathy for the one percent. First-time writer/director J.C. Chandor does his best David Mamet impression in this thriller about a Wall Street investment bank pulling an all-nighter on the verge of the 2008 market collapse. It's hard to feel bad for these people, but Chandor does a yeoman's job projecting a culture predicated on a lie, where all the money and gross profits can only last for so long before the music finally stops. Of particular note is Paul Bettany as a swaggering master of the universe only gradually discovering that the fast times are finally over. Equally affecting is Kevin Spacey as the firm's dumbstruck mentor, finally delivering a great performance after countless years of mundane drivel. I still have no idea what Demi Moore is doing in this movie, and the dying dog symbolism reeks of rank amateurism. (There really is a pet that needs to be put down, like the firm.) But Chandor's dialogue dazzles, and the gleaming surfaces cast a toxic spell. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Martha Marcy May Marlene ★★★★ The title is a mouthful, but that's kind of the point. Writer/director Sean Durkin's astonishing debut is all about a loss of identity and the slippery slope between the past and the present. It's impossible to know what in this film is just a dream, or, more likely, a nightmare. Played by Elizabeth Olsen (yes, kid sister to those odious twins), Martha is first glimpsed fleeing from a cult compound deep in the deceptively soothing woods of the Catskills. She makes a panicked phone call to her estranged sister Lucy (Sarah Paulson), but right away we can tell that something isn't right. In the style of vintage Polanski, Durkin's confident film uses long takes and tension within compositions to conjure a consuming sense of unease. There's something off about the camera angles and the space between these characters. We're left stranded between identities, trapped in the tragic limbo of a doomed girl with too many names and no idea what any of them stand for. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Melancholia ★★★★ There's a massive planet on a collision course with Earth, but knowing writer/director Lars Von Trier, we're probably more interested in its metaphorical implications. Kirsten Dunst stars as the less-interesting bipolar sister born into a family of privilege, rapid-cycling her way through one of the worst weddings ever captured on film. Granted, she never had a chance to begin with, as her mom (Charlotte Rampling) is going quietly nuts in the guest bedroom while papa (John Hurt) wrestles around with double dates. Family and friends self-destruct in blackly comic fashion throughout the shenanigans, and Dunst's Justine becomes a punishing sociopath. Full disclosure: I spent the better (and worst) parts of last year in a relationship with somebody I loved who suffered from a similar disorder. Melancholia scorched me to my core and left me unable to speak for an hour afterwards. Has there ever been a better metaphor for depression than a gigantic dark planet bearing down on you from the cosmos? (At Kendall Square.)

Moneyball ★★★ ½ Brad Pitt finally surrenders and turns in the kind of megawatt movie-star performance we've all been waiting for. As a pal noted, "He's playing the role exactly the way Robert Redford would've in the 1970s." Based on Michael Lewis' best seller, Moneyball stars Pitt as Oakland A's general manager Billy Beane, a once-promising player who washed out young. Now he's stuck trying to run a financially crippled franchise in a league where the big teams have gotten so rich that the smaller markets have been priced right out of the competition. All this inside-baseball talk is served up for your consideration by screenwriter Aaron Sorkin, who puts his trademark rapid-fire banter in the service of surprisingly sturdy and traditional underdog-sports-movie formulas. When it's at its best, Moneyball is preposterously entertaining, as Beane and partner in crime Peter Brand (Jonah Hill) hustle sports agents, owners and rival GMs. It's a movie about the game of baseball that contains surprisingly little actual baseball. It's more like The Bad News Bears with an economics degree. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Real Steel ★ I'm not sure which poor life decisions led to, at 36 years of age, watching a robot

Go Fish

No Bones About It The band Fishbone has maintained a fiercely loyal following since the late '70s. Fusing ska, funk, metal and soul, the group pioneered the alternative music genre, but somehow never managed to break into the pop charts. Lev Anderson and Chris Metzler worked closely with band members to create Everyday Sunshine: The Story of Fishbone, a poignant and artful documentary about their past, present and future, with commentary from the likes of Gwen Stefani and Ice-T. See the film at the Brattle Theatre Nov. 16–20. Courtney Carter fight a cow. Whatever they were, it's obviously time to rethink them. Such is the quandary of Real Steel, yet another film illustrating just how dull it can be watching giant computer-generated androids pounding the crap out of each other. Set in an unspecified future when robot boxing is the most popular sport in America, the film stars Hugh Jackman as a grizzled ex-fighter suddenly stuck with custody of his estranged 11-year-old son (Dakota Goyo, a graduate from the Jake Lloyd School of Child Acting). Would you be shocked if I told you that the kid helps Jackman turn his life around and finally become a decent dad? Can the underdog get a shot at the title? More importantly, will there be a single scene in this movie that isn't agonizingly predictable? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Skin I Live In ★★ ½ After floundering in recent years with sentimental Oscar bait, Pedro Almodóvar's cheerful return to perversity reunites him with his 1990s muse, Antonio Banderas. Here Banderas delivers a shocker of a performance as a vindictive plastic surgeon haunted by a laundry list of past tragedies that pile up in a telenovela fashion. Ingeniously employing a flashback structure that eliminates any possible critique without giving away the movie's most shocking secrets, it's only safe to reveal that Banderas' surgeon has been perfecting genetically engineered replacement skin with an unwilling human guinea pig locked in his elaborate home laboratory. There's some audacious messing with gender roles, and as usual, Almodóvar reels in a metric ton of winking classic film references, calling out everything from Franju's Eyes Without a Face to Hitchcock's Vertigo. The problem is the leaden pacing. Material this outré demands a dizzy, headlong pace, yet the director remains curiously detached and slowpokey. Twenty minutes tighter and this might've been something amazing. (At Kendall Square.)

Take Shelter ★★ ½ There's such an implicit threat of violence inside Michael Shannon, the question is never if he's going to explode, but when. His innate instability is the selling point of Take Shelter, Shannon's second collaboration with his Shotgun Stories writer/director Jeff Nichols. He's a good-hearted Midwestern laborer, haunted by terrifying apocalyptic dreams. Is he a doomsday prophet, or just losing his marbles? As the visions grow more intense, Shannon's diligent working man pours all his time and money into building a massive tornado shelter in the family's backyard. But will his urgent desire to protect his family also turn out to be their undoing? Shannon's night terrors can easily be read as a manifestation of that free-floating dread that has overtaken the country in recent years. Something terrible feels like it's just around the corner, even if we don't yet know what it is. The kind of film that's more exciting to talk about afterward than it is to actually sit through, it's a grindingly slow crawl toward ruin. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Tower Heist ★★ Brett Ratner's pandering Ocean's 11 knockoff stars Ben Stiller as a "working class" building manager for a luxury midtown Manhattan complex. Alan Alda plays a slimy, wannabe Bernie Madoff who has made off with the staff's pension funds in a Ponzi scheme. The only exciting thing about Tower Heist is that Eddie Murphy—playing a boyhood reprobate pal of Stiller's—actually seems to be trying again. (It's been a rough decade or two for us fans.) In full-on Billy Ray Valentine mode, Murphy lends these lugubrious proceedings a shot in the arm, constantly hinting at a filthier movie happening somewhere just outside the frame. Stiller's notorious ego is well represented, hogging most of the running time with his put-upon Queens drawl (he sounds like a parody of blue-collar Boston, dropping R's left and right). Brett Ratner continues to be the most anonymous filmmaker working today, with every cut and music cue arriving exactly where expected. Such a shame Murphy finally came back to play for such hackwork. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

ON THE HUNT

Mastodon bends the boundaries of metal.

Mastodon plays at House of Blues on Nov. 21.

Cindy Frey

"WE GET CRAZY IDEAS," Mastodon guitarist Bill Kelliher says of his mystical, monolithic metal outfit. Yet, edgy pieces like the new single "Curl of the Burl" keep the band stomping into mainstream view.

That song spins the tale of meth addicts roaming forests with chain saws to harvest burls, the knotty tree outgrowths that fetch a sweet price among wood sculptors and furniture-makers.

Somehow, it's a track that's more down to earth than the thrust of the Atlanta group's previous effort. The concept album Crack the Skye imagines an astral-traveling paraplegic whose spirit takes over Rasputin's body to overthrow the czar of Russia.

That ambitious project was largely driven by drummer/singer Brann

Dailor, who was reflecting on familial strife. But Mastodon's new album, The Hunter, proved more collaborative. Dailor, Kelliher, lead guitarist/singer Brent Hinds and bassist/singer Troy Sanders worked in various teams to transform their lyrical and musical whims into songs.

"We're not a one-trick pony," Kelliher says from his record company's L.A. office. "Everybody in the band writes material and has something to say. We're definitely the culmination of the four of us and our personalities."

Since the group emerged at the dawn of the new millennium, Mastodon has evolved over five albums from "screaming, because that's all we knew," says Kelliher, 40. "We've gotten better at honing our craft and lying back a bit rather than always being on the attack with the vocals."

It's paid off—from a 2006 Grammy nomination for best metal performance to the band's bracing appearances on late-night TV and at festivals such as Coachella and Bonnaroo.

"Stuff like that reassures me that we're headed in the right direction," says Kelliher, whose band hits House of Blues on Nov. 21. "Maybe we're changing the genres of what's considered metal."

On The Hunter, Mastodon's meaty, melodic attack hews more closely to grunge-rockers like Soundgarden, while shorter songs sharpen the hooks and dispense with the prog-rock excesses of Crack the Skye. "Not that we dumbed it down," Kelliher says, "but we didn't have the 15-minute opus songs."

> "Maybe we're changing the genres of what's considered metal."

The new album's chunky feast of buzzing, interwoven guitar riffs and crisp, cascading drum fills kicks off with the one-two punch of "Black Tongue" and "Curl of the Burl." Then "Blasteroid" flies into a giddy whiplash-inducing ride of cleanly harmonized vocals mixed with throat-shredding exhortations about drinking blood and breaking glass.

"I've always been a fan of vocal harmonizing... but having heavy guitars," Kelliher says, citing his appreciation for bands like Boston and Weezer as well as Metallica and Iron Maiden.

Part of the credit for Mastodon's relative refinement on The Hunter goes to new producer Mike Elizondo, whose broad résumé ranges from Eminem to Fiona Apple. "He worked really fast," Kelliher says of their sessions in Atlanta. "We had the spontaneity bug in us, like 'We just wrote this song, and we want to record it now and just get it done.'"

Pro Tools software helped with one such impulse, when Kelliher e-mailed in a last-minute addition to "Black Tongue" from a French hotel room. "We were on tour and there was no solo yet, so I had my Pro Tools on my laptop and plugged my guitar in," he says. "It was fly-by-the-seat-of-our-pants."

Likewise, the harried group opted not to wait for longtime accomplice Paul Romano to draw one of his intricate, psychedelic covers. "It would've taken months," Kelliher explains, "and we were ready."

Instead, they enlisted woodworking artist AJ Fosik to construct an eye-popping minotaur's head to grace the album cover. The use of 3D technology enables fans to interact with the album on another level, as web cameras can digitally superimpose the sculpture onto fans' heads.

Despite all the album's innovations, the emotion behind it stems from a primal place. Even though the group eschewed another complex concept for The Hunter, the album tackles serious terrain in two songs about friends who recently died, including Hinds' brother, who suffered a heart attack while hunting.

"When some kind of tragic thing happens, when it's very personal to us, it definitely helps us open up to write about it," Kelliher says. "It sparks the imagination." ✖✖✖

Sunshine State of Mind

Off They (Winneba)Go! The Felice Brothers have built their reputation on a folk-rock sound laden with accordion, fiddle and acoustic guitar. But their latest album, Celebration, Florida, veers slightly off that country road. With drum machines and synthesizers, the upstate New York natives darken and electrify their tunes. The family is all together on Nov. 18 for a trippy concert at Royale. Melissa Herrick

Go With the Flow

Free Lily Nathan Wilson stops Mother Nature in her tracks with his collection of still-life and landscape paintings. He represents the natural world using broad, heavy strokes and earthy hues. Wilson manages to capture its inherent paradox—subdued and still, but too wild to be controlled. Check out his collection of lily-spotted ponds and bare winter trees at the Chase Young Gallery through Nov. 27. After all, nature in the city is bigger than the Frog Pond. Maya Phillips

CAPED CRUSADERS

Does Commissioner Gordon Know About This?

The big-shots in Hollywood could take a few pointers from the organizers of the Storybook Ball, because the Batman-themed party, held at the Park Plaza Castle, was better than the last six movies combined.

To begin with, the visuals were amazing. Guests entered "stately Wayne Manor" through a bat-encrusted alley of orchid trees into what could've easily passed for the Joker's rumpus room: carnival games (with big-ticket prizes à la Gucci and Chanel) lined the periphery of the space, while Alfred-like servers plied the crowd with food and alcohol.

The crowd itself, many in costume, included cochairs Alyson Lindsay and Alli Achtmeyer with their respective other halves, Jeff and Bill, the ever sparkly Patty and Charles Ribakoff, statuesque Elena Matlack and her husband, Tom (sporting Dark Knight boxer shorts), queen of the night Lisa Pierpont, hot blonde mama Mary Jo Sisk and David Grossman, varsity-team partyers Michael Greeley and Kathy Burns, guitar hero Remy Stressenger, and so on and so forth.

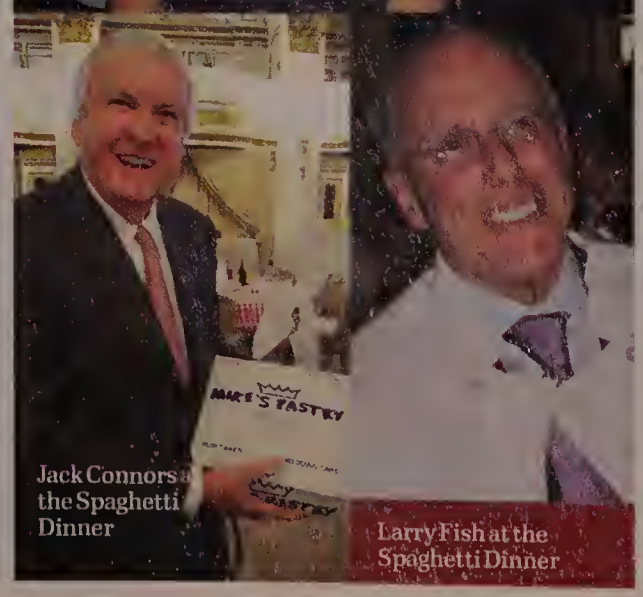
From the anteroom, guests entered a multi-tiered dining area reminiscent of the Batcave, if the Batcave was set for a four-course feast for 400. Needless to say, dinner was delicious, but the special treat of gyrating go-go girls was what convinced me this was Adam West's kind of party, while the amount of money raised for Mass. General's Children's Hospital was utterly staggering.

My two favorite quotes of the evening: The woman who said to the waiter trying to pour Champagne into her flute: "Thanks, but this is actually bourbon. I just like the pretty glass."

And the guest who said, "In my 20s, cocaine was like a plunger in the bathroom. Sometimes, you just needed it."

Graceful Aging

After a hiatus of several years, Boston's most Brahmin antiques show—The Ellis—made its return at the Cyclorama, with dealers from around the country peddling art, furniture and objects I couldn't begin to identify, let alone afford, to a highly civilized and select crowd.



Benjamin Spear, Billy Evers and Jane Miller at the Storybook Ball

Shaw and Liz Sprague at the Storybook Ball

Lisa Pierpont at the Storybook Ball

Jack Connors at the Spaghetti Dinner

Larry Fish at the Spaghetti Dinner

The preview party (traditionally the purview of every blue blood from Beacon Hill to Wellesley) attracted such donors, patrons and connoisseurs as the DeGregorio clan (Page, Barbara and Robert), the tanned and spiffy Mark Goldweitz, beloved TV personality Frank Avruch and the lovely Bette, bejeweled brunette Natalie Gardiner and the amiable John Hambright, banking babe Dyan Goodwin, North Shore dealers Andrew Spindler and his husband, Hiram Butler, and one man who scolded me for not wearing a tie.

The evening's best exchange:
"We've known each other since..."

"Don't say it!"

"OK, since I could buy a building on Dartmouth Street for $20,000."

"Yes. We now blend in with the antiques."

All Covered in Cheese

If you're going to put on black-tie and sit in a hotel ballroom, you might as well get to carbo-load to your heart's content, which is what made the 26th annual Spaghetti Dinner to benefit the Women's Lunch Place, held at the Copley Plaza, such an enchanted evening.

As one guest put it: "I'm Italian, so this is just like Sunday dinner with my family, except the dining room's a lot nicer, and no one's fighting."

Another contributing factor was the opportunity to rub elbows with the likes of advertising lion Jack Connors (who emceed the live auction), special guest and retired banking behemoth Larry Fish, board member Sarah Monaco, real estate mack-daddy Steve Weiner and the flawless Roberta, Dorchester A-gays Shawn McBride and Daron Manoogian, and so on and so forth.

The red-and-white checkered tablecloths set exactly the right tone, the two-liter bottles of wine kept disappearing (in fact, one guest drank enough to bid against himself in the auction), and the meatballs were delicious.

My only regret: Nobody sang "On Top of Spaghetti." But there's always next year. ✖✖✖

Human Nature

Even if we spend the next 50,000 years evolving into wee, hairless fairy people with giant brains, telekinetic powers and pinched little faces like Kristen Stewart, human nature will still be rooted in some ancient deathtrap of a savanna. The sort of place where our ancestors clobbered their rival chimps so they could steal the zebra carcass on which they'd been gnawing. This is a fact. Like that Jonathan Soroff spikes his hair with 100 percent Kurobuta pork lard. A fact.

During the holidays, of course, all that Hobbesian stuff goes up the chimney. It's the season of love, peace on Earth, goodwill to all men. (Cue canned laughter.) Admittedly, it's easy to sneer at the holidays. Everyone complains that they're too commercial, too stressful, too packed with unnecessary fat, like eggnog or Jonathan's hair. We pine for an imaginary yesteryear in which families all smoked pipes, wore matching reindeer-motif sweaters and reeked of nutmeg. But the holidays have always been demanding. Thousands of years ago, when our ancestors held hands around the zebra carcass and thanked the violent furies of their blood gods for this moment of bounty, they stressed about whether Uncle Zurg would try doing his bonobo impression at dessert.

Another fact of human nature: We are social apes. We were able to steal the zebra because we brought our buddies along to heft a pointy rock at the original owners. When you tackle your holiday shopping, a word of advice: Bring your tribe, and don't forget the pointy rocks.

"IT'S LIKE CINDERELLA: You put on the shoes, and you're transformed." In 2006, Kristina Kozak completed a career change from State Streeter to shoemaker with the debut of her footwear line. Now, from her Pembroke sunroom, Kozak crafts Mary Janes, heels and sandals with materials like mink, python and stingray. They're distinctive, dramatic and, Kozak hopes, transformative. "I want something fun to add some happiness to your life," she says. "The right shoes change your outfit, and also your outlook." NICK ALTSCHULLER

String Hoppers $12

Good Eats

Bundle Up

String hoppers are nests of rice flour noodles, bundles of steamed strands that look like woven vermicelli crepes. They're a house specialty at Biryani Park, Boston's lone Sri Lankan restaurant, stationed on a busy stretch of Route 99. Owner Premila Mathews serves 10 per order with traditional accompaniments like hothi—a relative of Indian dal spiced with chiles, mustard seeds and cardamom—and a savory sambol made from flaky shredded coconut and rice powder. They're ideal for dipping and scooping, but plan ahead. An order of string hoppers requires 24 hours' notice.

Two new family affairs

BEHOLD, the perfect Margherita pizza: a crust that's crispy yet chewy, smoky and evenly baked; a sauce rich with organic San Marzano tomatoes; delicate, milky dots of Fior di Latte mozzarella and accents of fresh basil leaves and a light dusting of Parmesan. So good, "just one slice" became half a pie for this normally disciplined diner.

So good, in fact, that buzz began the moment Max and Leo Candidus opened the doors of Max & Leo's Pizza earlier this month, and the identical twins are already pondering an expansion to their Newton Corner location. It's a cozy, stylish space with a handful of reclaimed wood tables and a wine rack crafted from gas piping, but the focal point is a 9,000-pound coal-fired oven in which temperatures can reach a crust-searing 900 degrees.

Although the Margherita is the benchmark, the most popular pizza is topped with Blue Ribbon pulled pork, barbecue glaze, caramelized onions, smoked mozzarella and barbecue sauce. "We're always looking for flavor combinations," says Max. Submit a winner and he'll name it after you.

CASBAH, the new Mediterranean restaurant near Cambridge's Fresh Pond Circle, should remind you of Harvard Square's Casablanca. It's a joint project from Casablanca owner Sari Abul-Jubein and his son Jason, a former forest ranger turned restaurateur. Expect a more casual vibe, lower prices and a menu featuring a variety of skewers and some of Casablanca's greatest hits, including the house-smoked pulled lamb with charred tomatoes, spicy yogurt and mint oil.

TABLE TALK

Suburbanites mourned when chef Chris Parsons shuttered Parsons Table in Winchester Center in late November, but Vittorio Ettore is happy about the change. The Tuscan-born chef/owner of Bistro 5 has taken over the barnwood-clad spot and turned it into A Tavola, a modern Italian restaurant that promises to continue the farm-to-fork trend he helped pioneer locally.

"I'd been eying this location for so long," he says. "Then all of a sudden I got an e-mail from Chris. How could I not take this opportunity?" Ettore has lived in Winchester for nearly 10 years, and A Tavola (Italian for table) is within walking distance of his home—an ideal situation for a busy dad. "This is the restaurant I've wanted to do for so long," he says. "It's important for me to be able to talk to my customers. I can't imagine having a place where I can't see everyone that's there." He and chef de cuisine Brendan Woods will get plenty of face time in the 48-seat space.

Renovations included adding more weathered boards to the walls and bathing the square dining room in rich red hues, evocative of Italy. Decor is simple—antique tools and signage from Wright-Locke Farm down the road—while the cuisine promises to be more ornate. Dishes include handmade tagliatelle with cuttlefish, cherry tomatoes and basil or cocoa-spiced pappardelle with braised rabbit and goat cheese. There's also made-to-order seafood risotto, available in shades of yellow, red, black and white.

"HOW COULD I NOT TAKE THIS OPPORTUNITY?"

But Ettore seems most excited about the porchetta, a whole-roasted pig served with sausage, kale and acorn squash beneath a smoking dome. "The farm-to-table movement has made people more comfortable with knowing that their pork actually came from a pig, or that chicken comes from a chicken," he says with a laugh.

An all-Italian wine list is largely served by the quartino instead of the glass, to encourage diners to sample different labels. Each pour is enough for two people to get a taste, and a bottle is finished in three orders. "It's just a way of keeping everything fresh," Ettore says. "We like things fresh here."

Fat of the land

Q&A

HIGH TIMES

Kathleen Turner became an icon in the 1980s with films like Body Heat and Romancing the Stone. This March, she debuted the role of Sister Jamison Connolly in Matthew Lombardo's High on Broadway. The production kicks off its national tour at the Cutler Majestic Theatre on Dec. 6.

Did you ever expect to be playing a nun?
No, not really. But I do find this character to slip on quite easily. She's a nun, but she has a complex past and is unabashedly foulmouthed. She's a recovering alcoholic and isn't saintly by any means. That isn't to say she doesn't take her vows seriously, though.

What about the role was attractive?
It's the conflict between faith and addiction. These two incredibly strong forces are pulling back and forth.

Do you have any desire to act in films anymore?
As I got older, I found that the roles for women got less and less interesting, but they get more complex and more challenging on stage. I just finished an indie film called Perfect Family, and I'm very pleased with it.

Why did you want to take High on tour?
When we closed on Broadway, it absolutely broke my heart, and I couldn't get out of bed for weeks. It was too soon, and it didn't serve the play. I always wanted to share this show. And I think the rest of the country deserves the same quality of production that people in New York get.

How have audiences responded to a work with such heavy religious themes?
It's been very mixed. In Cincinnati there's a huge Catholic population, and the audience was really split down the middle between glorifying and attacking it. Personally, I don't belong to any organized religion. I'm more spiritual.

How has being an actress in Hollywood changed?
I feel very worried and sorry for younger actresses. I made sure to keep my private life out of the public eye. Journalists would want to do interviews in my home, and I never allowed that because it was my husband's and daughter's home as well. People can't make those choices anymore, and there's a pressure to be a celebrity.

Do you miss teaching?
Oh, very much. I love to do master classes at universities when I'm on tour. I'm only in the town for short periods, so that kind of dictates the format of the class and how much I can do, but it's a great way to meet younger actors and give them advice.

PRESSING ISSUE

An adventure in clean living and running on empty

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

THERE ARE MANY REASONS TO go on a hunger strike. People forgo food to protest an injustice, or to seek spiritual enlightenment. But because Jared Leto drank spicy lemonade for 10 days and dropped a few pounds is kind of a silly reason to skip breakfast.

Like adopting babies and naming them after the toaster or whatever's in the fruit bowl, juice cleansing is a celebrity trend that's difficult to grasp. When her normal diet of tree bark and sunlight begins to weigh her down, Gwyneth Paltrow turns to organic pressings. Salma Hayek recently launched her own juice brand. But like an actor confused about a role, as I prepared for my own cleanse, I had trouble finding my motivation.

I'm not an unhealthy guy. I work out. I eat right. In fact, making the leap to 1 percent from skim required some deep reflection. As a result, I'm thin, and probably not juicing's target audience. Removing mastication from my day wasn't the root of my hesitation; it was the 1,000-plus calories I'd be removing from my diet. Skinny I can handle; scrawny I have a problem with.

Micki Oliva of Blueprint Cleanse assured me that I wouldn't waste away after three days of "Renovation," the first of their three cleansing levels. (The top level is "Excavation," which I avoided, as the name had me picturing small men with pickaxes at work in my colon.)

For motivation, I settled on the excuse of a pre-holiday diet. After three days of no solids or booze, I could feel justified in making a Thanksgiving sandwich bigger than the family dog or asking my boss to hold my legs for a keg stand at the company party.

Day 1: Blueprint recommends starting your morning with some water and lemon, so as to awaken the palate. As a breakfast lover, that's like waking the kids up for Christmas and throwing their presents out the window.

It's surprisingly easy after that. Out of your day's menu of six 16 oz. bottles, two are of a blend called "Green Juice," a slightly bitter liquefied salad that's not unpleasant, though it makes your inner Charlton Heston suspicious. "P.A.M" (pineapple, apple, mint) is, in fact, delicious (and probably even better with rum). By the time you get to your nighttime dose of cashew milk, the biggest surprise is that going an entire day without food is actually a piece of cake.

Day 2: Still no rumble in my belly, but the cleanse began to affect my head. By 3 pm, I felt spacey and my words came in slow motion. Basically, I was stoned. Each bottle would reawaken my system, but while I still wasn't pining for food, I was missing the fun in our relationship.

That night I watched friends eat dinner, which is no way to spend a Friday. As I sucked down a beet juice, one buddy dug into steak tips and described his recent culinary adventures in Hong Kong. I threw some salt crystals in my mouth, desperate for variation.

Day 3: According to Oliva, the working principle of the cleanse is that you're letting your digestive system rest, giving your body extra energy it can use "to help clean itself out."

I slept for 11 hours. I felt no extra energy (nor any changes in my gut). In a small dream before waking, I pictured a plate of French toast. Remembering I couldn't eat, I thought, "What do I have to get up for?" That's not a healthy way to start a day.

The one part of my body that was supercharged was my nose. I could identify items cooking on a stove top two rooms away. I could list components to a cabernet's bouquet, when I usually say things like, "It smells like grapes." My body could go on for days, but my brain was ready to eat.

On the morning after my cleanse, I weighed myself to find I'd dropped a pound and a half. I then bought a large coffee with cream and a muffin the size of a brick, which I troweled with jam. For lunch I had a salad. Everything in moderation. Which makes a three-day cleanse extreme.

I didn't feel cleaner or more virtuous, just perhaps more aware. The food world is industrialized. Bad cantaloupe can kill. One-hundred-ninety-five bucks worth of juice is too steep a price, but we could all be more mindful of what we put in our bodies. It's a theory easier in design than in practice, but at least it's something to chew on. ✖✖✖

OCCUPY ELSEWHERE

A WORD OF ADVICE: As your server, I understand your desire for a lovely evening out. You want to sit and enjoy your meal. But spending $100 doesn't mean you have the table for the entire night—especially in a busy restaurant. Occupying a table long after you've finished dinner, dessert and coffee, and after you've only tipped me 15 percent, is rude. It's time to move on to the bar, the lounge or your house. There are options. I'm trying to make a living, and that means turning a table. Still waiting

To the handsome redheaded mailman: Thank you so much for showing me that chivalry isn't dead. It took me by pleasant surprise. You can lick my stamp anytime. Priority express

To the obnoxiously loud bros passing around the Jack Daniels on the B Line: OK, we get it. You have a miserable office job, no girlfriends and plenty of repressed homoerotic tendencies that you try to overcompensate for by yelling about sports and Jäger bombs. You want to forget your miserable lives, but could you try to do it elsewhere?

Frustrated MBTA rider

To the bar-crawling Sasquatch in need of a shower: When you're carrying your hipster banjo or whatever it is on your back, you're taking up extra room on the sidewalk. How about trying to be considerate and giving other people room to maneuver, rather than making them dodge your swinging rat sack?

Drink of the Moment

Good Noose

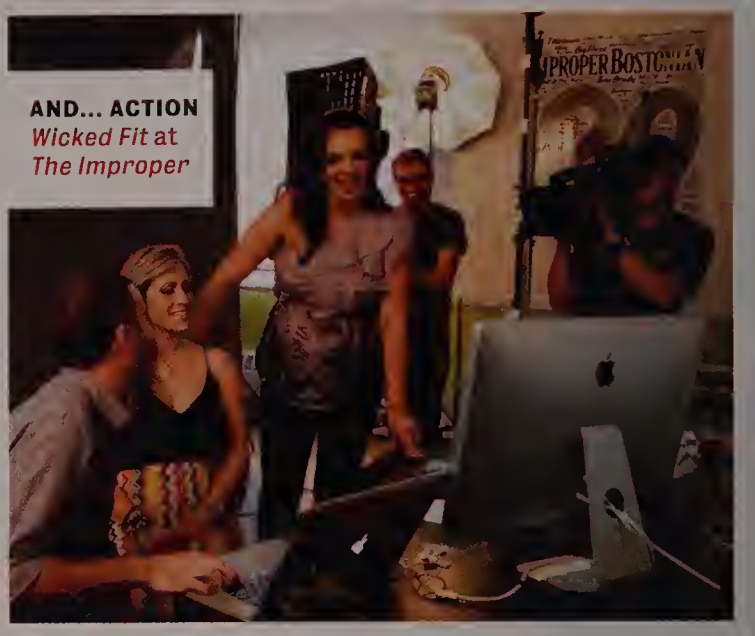
INGREDIENTS: Aquavit, Bärenjäger, Becherovka, arugula, lemon.

PRICE: $10 THE NAME: "Beton" is the French word for concrete, a macabre reference to cement shoes.

INVENTOR: Danielle Marshall.

PAIR IT WITH: The Ploughman ($17), a hearty selection of charcuterie and cheese that goes nicely with the cocktail's refreshing finish.

SELLING POINT: The ladies behind Gallows' all-female bar keep slinging the drink because it introduces customers to new spirits.



MOST LIKELY TO: Mislead with its appearance. Cheery lemon and sprightly arugula suggest a springtime salad in a glass, but the drink's flavors are just the opposite.

TASTING NOTES: Good luck picking out individual flavors or tasting the same thing twice. The complex cocktail successfully fuses lemon, cinnamon, caraway and clove in one refreshing, easily downed lowball. Peppery arugula and full-bodied honey notes peek in from time to time.

TIP YOUR TOUR GUIDE: Beton Verde is a cocktail tour through Norway (Aquavit), Germany (Bärenjäger) and the Czech Republic (Becherovka).

Reality Bites

FIT TO BE TRIED

For many, turning down a place in the spotlight can be nearly impossible—a fact that explains the glut of reality shows out there. And, as was proven when STYLE NETWORK'S WICKED FIT came calling to The Improper offices, our staff is no exception.

Starring brash Wellesley fitness trainer Katie Boyd, the fledgling show follows the former pageant girl as she barks orders at her clients (Lift more weights. Squats, now), while stirring up the politics among her staff. But it also follows her outside the gym—and in this case, that meant into our offices so we could conduct an on-camera interview and photo shoot for an upcoming episode. And she arrived like a freight train—along with one of her most high-profile clients, Red Sox wife Farrah Lester.

"This isn't about just being in good shape," Boyd said during her interview. "It's really all about self-esteem. That's what I tell all of the beauty pageant contestants who I train." That's presumably what she told Lester, too, the entire time they were working together to take off the weight Lester had gained after a recent pregnancy.

"When you're a mom you've got so many people's needs that you're putting in front of your own," said Lester. "I needed to balance that with what I needed for myself." She also needed a confidence bump, she insisted. "I felt like I was being judged harshly by fans for not being in the kind of shape people felt I should be in. But I did need to do that for myself, even though sometimes it was hard to be doing it so much in the public eye."

Of course, this was said on the set of a reality show. But hey, who are we to judge? The episode airs Dec. 18, and we'll be on TV right beside both Boyd and Lester.

IN THE GENES

Facing today under the shadow of tomorrow

THE SHADOW OF CANCER hovers over Amy Boesky's family, with a "due date" of 45 years being the age at which some of her female relations have died. Boesky, a 32-year-old professor, is married to Jacques and the mother of Sacha. Her own loving, forceful, history-teacher mother suffers from cancer, and, despite the drug treatment (amazingly called F.U.), passes away. While living through that—and the "cancer calendar" it imposes—Boesky also weighs the choice of whether to undergo genetic testing.

What's engaging about this book is the novelistic way in which Boesky writes about her family's richly textured connections and their lives underneath the crisis. They move to Boston, live temporarily in a place mocked as "The House With Green Shag," and, after her sister's miscarriage while Amy is pregnant, a sisterly tension develops. There's also her mission to keep her literary life alive—"The love of poetry. The way it feels to turn a word over and over, until it glows."—and the arrival of baby number two. Born after her grandmother's death, Elisabeth is "Elfin. Exuberant. Empathic. Energetic. Elegiac." The negative and positive tension between sickness and health is elastically portrayed. ×××

What We Have
by Amy Boesky

Boesky teaches English at Boston College.

FROM PAGE 248: "It was a good day. It had taken enormous effort, but we'd done it. We'd had lunch, kidded around, Jacques and Jon were throwing a football back and forth, in an aren't we-like-the-Kennedys kind of way, all bluff and boyish humor. And there was a nice sense of being, just for this little while, free from worrying about anything having to do with the body, with being hungry or tired or hurting, with being too hot or too cold or needing to go to the bathroom.... Even my mother seemed relatively comfortable, at least for the moment."

RED, WHITE AND BOOZE

Taking in the history of our nation's capital, one sip at a time.

STATELY GRACE Indulge in a glass of wine from one of Plume's 1,300 labels.

WASHINGTON, D.C., is often regarded as a ho-hum hub of monuments, politically motivated soapboxers and Salahis. And it is. But if you've already had your fill of textbook-style history, there's still plenty to do. You just need to know where to look.

It's an oft-forgotten fact that Thomas Jefferson, third president of the United States and all-around badass, was a major oenophile. In 1787, he took a three-and-a-half-month break from the presidency (try that one, Obama) to go on a wine tour in Europe, and he collected hundreds of thousands of bottles over the course of his lifetime.

The Jefferson, an amalgam of historic buildings reborn as an ultra-luxe boutique hotel, uses its namesake as inspiration for its atmosphere and decor. A beaux arts–style lobby shuffles guests past sculptures and period artifacts, including Jefferson's original letters. Above, a 1923 skylight, covered up during World War II and restored after the 99-room hotel underwent a two-year renovation in 2007, fills the foyer with natural light and creates a perfect spot to enjoy breakfast or lunch.

Upstairs, the plush guest rooms blend modern amenities with old-school formality, adding pops of zebra print and orange to contrast the off-white walls. Suites are decked in gold and platinum, for a touch of the regal. Downstairs, history lessons continue in the library, where you can sip whiskey while perusing an antique book. But the real fun begins next door, where Washington's movers and shakers flock to the honey-hued, hand-blown glass bar at Quills. There's also an outdoor patio, ideal for smoking a cigar and sipping a signature cocktail like the Bourbon Pool Side, a mix of refined spirits, including Lillet Blanc and Jefferson's Bourbon, spiked with a tart lemon-mango foam.

Down the marble hallway you'll find Plume, executive chef Chris Jakubiec's over-the-top take on fine dining. Fittingly, its focus is on wine—sommelier Michael Scaffidi marshals more than 1,300 labels, with a particularly impressive list of domestics. Also note the Madeiras dating back to the 18th- and 19th-centuries, when Jefferson might've tasted the same vintage. Another tribute to the founding father: the pewter accents are a reference to his love of birds, and the hand-painted wallpaper offers a 360-degree view of Monticello.

Plume is the kind of place where they give you an upholstered stool on which to set your handbag and cell phone during dinner, and where whispering feels like screaming. For a more casual night, stroll a few blocks down, past the White House, to Marcel's. A French-Belgian boîte helmed by chef Robert Wiedmaier, it serves rich, buttery fare and European wines selected by sommelier Moez Ben Achour. As well as the expected roast pork loin, try hearty, and more international, plates like Kumamoto oyster stew and lamb wrapped in phyllo dough.

After dinner, visit the Gibson, a Prohibition-style speakeasy so popular, it's best to reserve a table. Located on the U Street Corridor, the Gibson is the kind of bar that Boston sorely lacks: a casual spot, lit only by candlelight, that differentiates itself without noticeable effort. Despite its popularity, it's tough to find, but a sip of the Glittery Bitch, a berry-spiked craft cocktail, makes it worth the search.

Overimbibers should plan on a day-after visit to the new Burger Tap & Shake for a little hair-of-the-dog. This comes in the form of a boozy milkshake, or "shaketail." Hand-cut fries and from-scratch burgers made by chef Jeff Tunks can tamp down a hangover, but a few sips of the Talladega Nights, a perfect blend of sweet-tea vodka, housemade limoncello, vanilla ice cream and lemon sorbet, is what truly refreshes. This is American culture at its finest, and you don't have to wait in line at the Smithsonian. ***

Catalyst Restaurant
300 Technology Square, Cambridge
(617-576-3000)
catalystrestaurant.com

Despite the right elements, Catalyst doesn't quite spark the imagination.

MEAT UP Catalyst's dining room provides an elegant backdrop to enjoy the tournedos of beef.

THE TOURNEDOS OF BEEF haunt me. One of the best dishes ($28) I've had in a while, the two burgundy circles crowned with taleggio-stuffed raviolis sit like eyes staring up from atop a demiglaze of bordelaise that has taken chef/owner William Kovel three days to make. It's no wonder Kovel considers them his signature dish from his stint at the now-defunct Aujourd'hui. Though difficult for a critic to admit, the combination transcends words. If, as its name suggests, the restaurant likens cooking to chemistry, then these medallions are the product of something more ineffable, alchemical. So what's the problem?

Were I to assess Catalyst based on the tournedos or the equally superb hen-of-the-woods-stuffed raviolis ($10, appetizer; $19, entree)—small pockets of umami anointed with butter and salt—I wouldn't hesitate to award it five stars and crow about the latest addition to Cambridge's dining scene. But the problem is that these two spectacular dishes also haunt the rest of the menu, because the other offerings fall short.

Seared spice-crusted hiramasa ($11), another holdover from Aujourd'hui, brought paper-thin shavings of farmed yellowtail arranged over ribbons of cucumber and radish. Whereas the Four Seasons' version boasted sashimi-thick morsels, here the finely sliced fish disappeared into the salad's sweet vinaigrette. Although a substantial portion, the lemon sole ($27) seemed to be missing its vermouth butter and creamed leeks.

Similarly, the poultry I tried sounded good on paper but lacked distinguishing flavor and depth. The crispy quail appetizer ($15) delivered a dry bird adorned with a drizzle of gastrique and mizuna leaves perched on a poached black mission fig. The honey-glazed duck breast ($26) was chewy when it should've been crispy, bland though it promised sweetness. Chicken-liver mousse ($10), while lovely with grilled bread and pickled onions, tasted like the standard issue found on many menus around the city. Garganelli ($10), rolled in-house by two full-time pastamakers, was enhanced by meaty ovals of chicken oysters but could've benefited from a larger dose of black-truffle butter. The Catalyst burger ($15), a vertically precarious skyscraper of meat, caramelized onions and roast tomato, satisfies but doesn't distinguish itself from its gourmet-burger brethren. Each dish sounded a familiar, and safe, note. It's not so much simple food done well, as it is simple food done formulaicly well.

All of this comes back to chemistry versus alchemy. What nudges something from good to divine? It can't be the ingredients, because Kovel's commitment to local produce and seasonal sourcing is above reproach (he's a proud member of the activist organization Chefs Collaborative). It can't be the atmosphere, because the space—with its 30-foot ceilings, two-way fireplace and rooms for lounging, dining and business meeting—provides a dramatic, elegant backdrop for lingering over a meal (albeit with a curious '70s classic rock soundtrack). And it's certainly not the service, warmly executed by staff members who remember faces (I was dining under another name) and provide extras like after-dinner cappuccinos for returning patrons. Perhaps the difference between chemistry and alchemy resides in the kind of experiments and risks taken, the willingness to work with unknown properties and quantities, to veer off-course. Whatever that transformative property that forms culinary gold, I hope it finds its way from those tournedos to the rest of the menu. ✖✖✖

The third annual "Casino Royale" to benefit the Home for Little Wanderers took place at the State Room on Oct. 15. For three years, the party has served as a shared birthday celebration for event founders Kellen Benjamin, Salvatore Boscarino and Ace Gershfield. Casino games and auctions entertained the crowd of 400 guests, raising $50,000 for the charity.

TargetCancer was founded in 2009 by the late Paul Poth to fund research into lesser-known cancers. Its second annual benefit took place on Nov. 3 at Royale and featured performances by Grant-Lee Phillips, Dean & Britta and Will Dailey and the Rivals. ASK CHERYL

CHERYL CLARKSON
M.S., Massachusetts Institute of Technology
CEO & Founder

Q: WHAT ARE THE MOST COMMON USES OF BOTOX?

A: Botox is most commonly used to treat the "11's", vertical lines between the eyebrows; frown lines on the forehead; and crow's feet, the crinkly lines at the side of our eyes.

However, experienced physicians also inject Botox elsewhere on the face to remove smoker's lines above the upper lip, bunny lines on the nose, lifting up the corners of the mouth, lessening the appearance of neck bands, decreasing the "orange peel" appearance of the chin, and lifting eyebrows.

Botox injections are becoming very mainstream for men and women who want to look less stressed or tired. It takes a few minutes, nobody knows you have had it done, you don't look fake, simply more rested (therefore younger!)

Q: I HAD ACNE AS A TEENAGER AND NOW HAVE BAD ACNE SCARS ON MY FACE: CAN ANYTHING BE DONE?

A: I'm sorry to hear that. Millions of people suffer from acne scars. I have good news for you. Within the past few years several types of new technology have been introduced that significantly reduce, and some cases totally eliminate, scars from acne, as well as other types of scars.

This is how it works: pulses of fractional laser light or radio frequency waves break down scar tissue, triggering new, healthy tissue to form in its place. It is a fast and simple procedure with no downtime and minimal discomfort.

You don't have to live with the embarrassment of your scars any longer. Fractional treatments can even be used on scars that you have had for many years with good success.

BIG HACK ATTACK

On my website at least, crime doesn't pay.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

AS YOU MAY HAVE HEARD, Facebook was recently assailed by hackers. These canny geniuses used their computer savvy to digitally invade the $80-billion Web company's kingdom, where they used their unprecedented access to... post porn. Come on, hackers. If we wanted porn on our social media, we'd all still be on Myspace.

Facebook isn't alone in its vulnerability. According to a September Vanity Fair story, there's a coordinated hacker group dubbed Operation Shady R.A.T. that's attacking governments, defense contractors and other organizations in 14 countries. Want to know one country it's not targeting? China. That's a funny coincidence, there, China. You keep up with this sort of behavior, and we're not going to sell you our debt anymore. (Just kidding. Please buy our debt.)

I know a guy who works in industrial cyber-security, and his stories are unnerving (let's just say I wouldn't want to live downstream of a major dam). But let's talk about a really important matter of national security: Scarlett Johansson. Miss Johansson had some compromising photos stolen from her computer, which gives us something in common, because my website was pirated. So if she wants a caring shoulder to lean on, an ear to bend about invasions of electronic privacy, I want her to know that I'm here for her. Not just as a friend, but as possibly the only guy on the planet who hasn't yet seen her nudie photos. I swear.

Why not? Because I respect her privacy. And also because I'm afraid to type "Scarlett Johansson naked" into Google. I feel like even if I tried to cover my tracks, I'm not smart enough to prevent that search from haunting me forever. Two years from now, my wife will be using my laptop, and suddenly every page will be accompanied by an ad that says, "Looking for naked photos of SCARLETT JOHANSSON? Click here!" Although I guess that's not the most embarrassing thing you could have in your Google search history. It's not like you're typing in "midget snuff" or "Jack and Jill movie times."

In my own hacking experience, no racy photos were stolen, but my site's home page was replaced with the logo of a hacker group and an e-mail address. Apparently, I was supposed to e-mail them and pay a ransom. It was flattering, really. Hacked? Moi? You must think I'm really important, you group of bored 11-year-olds in Pakistan. You must also think I care about my website, an idea that'd be instantly refuted by visiting it. You're too late, hackers, because my site was already infiltrated by my own apathy. In any case, I called my digital Orkin man and had the invaders booted. Hey, chumps! Nobody ruins my website but me.

All this digital chaos prompts me to fondly recall a simpler time, when more traditional criminals smashed my car window in the Hacked? Moi? You must think I'm really important, you group of bored 11-year-olds in Pakistan.

South End and took my wallet on a spending spree at Payless Shoes. And then there were the three times that my apartment on Beacon Hill got burglarized. And then there was the transvestite purse-snatcher who terrorized The Improper office. At least in those cases you knew how to react: Stop leaving your wallet in your car, get a better deadbolt, report any unfamiliar tall ladies roaming around the office. But with electronic attacks, there's no easy way to return to an analog life. Good luck getting your employer to switch from direct-deposit to a biweekly allocation of raccoon pelts and doubloons. We go that route, we may as well let Maine rejoin the Commonwealth. (Seriously, though, a kid at my grade school in Maine brought squirrel pelts to show and tell. I remember thinking, "What happened to the rest of the squirrel?")

In spite of the hacker proclivity toward identity theft, online reputation-smearing and blackmail, I choose to look on the bright side: The prevalence of hacking means that you have a new excuse for asinine behavior. Remember Anthony Weiner's initial explanation of his Twitter debacle? He said his account was hacked. Ray Allen and Braylon Edwards have pleaded that their Twitter accounts were hacked. Brett Favre would've claimed his phone was hacked, if he were smart enough to think of that. "I got hacked" is the dog-ate-my-homework of the 21st century.

Late for a meeting? Someone hacked your calendar. Say something rude online while drunk? Someone hacked your Facebook account. Don't like this column? I didn't even write it; it was totally hacked. That's why I support you, devious computer nerds around the world. Because there's one thing that a functioning society needs more than bullet-proof security of our bank accounts and air traffic control. And that's excuses. ✖✖✖

I'VE GOT A LITTLE LIST

My annual pick of personal favorites

A highlight under the spotlights

ONCE A YEAR, I SHARE my favorite experiences, be they literary, theatrical or gustatory. Here are some of the most pleasurable moments from 2011.

In the reading department, it's all over the lot. For a thriller, try Stephen Hunter's Dead Zero, about mercenaries in Afghanistan. He's a Pulitzer Prize–winning film critic and the best novelist on weaponry I've ever read. As a counterpoint, try Steve Martin's delicious little novel about the art world, An Object of Beauty. The book has a great heroine who's the anti–Holly Golightly. If you care about the theater, or writing or real romance, Antonia Fraser's memoir about her marriage to the playwright Harold Pinter, Must You Go?, is full of joy and sadness and inside dish you'll find enthralling—particularly if you're an Anglophile and love gossip. But my favorite book of 2011 was Justin Cartwright's Other People's Money, a tale of the recent financial meltdown focusing on Britain. It's smart on many topics: class, fear, greed, love and the endless absurdities of life.

My restaurant adventures included breakfast at the Beacon Hill Bistro, which is great for people watching and has the best toast in town, as well as the best French toast, made from Iggy's brioche, cider-braised apples and spiced crème fraîche.

The most exciting dinner I ate this year, though, was at Mistral. Visits there are always special, the Cornish game hen a simple delight. But it wasn't just the hen that made the night memorable. The lighting was subtle enough to embolden young lovers. I was dining with an old friend, Fenway Mike, who was chatting away. But I was distracted by a young couple at a banquette next to us. They were making out as if they were alone in the room. I pointed this out to Fenway Mike, and he nodded at our neighbors on the other side. "They've been going at it since we walked in."

Other notable dining experiences: the best hamburger lunch at Woodward in the Ames Hotel, the Prince Edward Island no-shell mussels at Island Creek Oyster Bar, crunchy eggplant at Via Matta, Maremmana sauce over linguini at Ristorante Toscano. Lastly, I have to mention that, along with superb salad Niçoise, Oceanaire has the most amazing quotation painted in the men's room. It's from James Joyce: "The snot green sea. The scrotum tightening sea…" Context is everything.

One of my theater highlights was the A.R.T.'s production of Porgy and Bess. Some purists complained about modern changes to Gershwin's original production, including what was perceived as a happier ending. I didn't think it was a happy ending at all, and I concentrated more on the brilliance of the songs and the performances. I must also add to another thought on that sad ending: The cast was almost 98 percent black; the audience the night I attended was 100 percent white. I saw no review that mentioned this fact, but it was probably no different from the audience who came to the original opening in 1956.

John D. Spooner is an investment advisor, author and novelist. Contact him at thedance@improper.com.

Michael J. Lutch

The real musical high point for me was the Huntington Theatre's production of Candide. I saw the original when I was in college, waiting in line for cheap student tickets. A friend who's a theater nut told me, "Candide is the quirkiest musical ever, with the most sophisticated lyrics by great writers. You'll have to get the record to hear them over and over." I did, and the Huntington's revival was great theater.

No one, in my experience, ever writes about best and worst charitable events. They are, in my experience, necessary evils for the greater good. Most people seem to say the same thing: "Save the events, just let me send you a check and not have to go anywhere." I've been to hundreds of these gatherings, maybe thousands, and I concur. But, every year, there are exceptions to these "grumpy galas," as I call them. One of the two best is the Joey Fund film benefit hosted by Kathy and Joe O'Donnell, benefiting efforts to cure cystic fibrosis. People actually feel lucky to get an invitation. It's a people-watching and networking frenzy, with food from great chefs, popcorn with butter and a pre-release new movie. The night feels so good.

Then there's the annual Literary Lights dinner for the associates of the Boston Public Library. Everyone in the crowd is a lover of books. There's almost always a great speaker like David McCullough and the honorees' books piled on the tables to take home. As an added treat, the mistress of ceremonies is Vivian Spiro, president of the associates. She gives the most spirited, funny and smart introduction to any nonprofit event. Come see for yourself.

The last recommendation on my best list is a healthy one. People who presume to take care of us, in an increasingly anonymous world, are tougher and tougher to find, be they doctors or plumbers or money people. This means it's more difficult to find people who really care about others and don't take the assembly-line approach. I've had a physical therapist for some months, working on a torn miniscus. Therapy trumps surgery in my mind, every time. My therapist is Erica Palmer, at Joint Ventures. She is professional, smart and determined to solve the problem. Great service and attention to detail are rare. If Erica can't help you, you probably really do need to go under the knife.

A healthy New Year to all of our readers. ×××

GRONK LIKE TAKE 5. GRONK MAKE SCORE!

TIP BALL Gronk has a record in his sights.

5 QUESTIONS FOR WINTER

Will Rob Gronkowski Get the Touchdown Record? At press time, Gronky Kong needs just four touchdowns over the last six games to break the NFL single-season record for tight ends. Not bad for a 22-year-old half man/half prehistoric beast. By season's end, Gronk will have done more in two years than most guys do in a career. He's not only a larger-than-life cult hero, he's also on pace to become an all-time great. Gronk Smash!

Are the B's Struggles Behind Them? We saw it with the Sox: 1. An awful start. 2. A major turnaround. 3. A bookend drought so horrific it left me blind in my left eye. Now, we're seeing it with the Bruins: 1. An awful start. 2. A major turnaround. 3. Well? What do you think? Are they in the clear? I hope so. One eye patch is enough.

Will the Jets Make the Playoffs? It looks like the Pats are in. Same for the Texans, Ravens and Steelers. The AFC West winner (likely Oakland) will take the fifth spot, which leaves the Jets, Bengals, Bills, Titans and Tebows battling for the sixth seed. Sadly, I say the Jets sneak in. Despite their struggles, they're still the best of the bunch, with a very easy schedule to boot. (Sorry, Rex. Didn't mean to say boot.) (Oops, said it again.) (You naughty boy.)

Is Bobby V the Man for the Job? If there's one thing the Red Sox have missed these past few years (well, besides quality starts from John Lackey), it's personality. And at the very least, Bobby Valentine brings that to the table. Then again, when the first thing you say about someone is "Eh, they have a great personality," you're usually compensating for something. In this case, it's that Valentine's a kook.

Does Bill Belichick Need a Defensive Coordinator? It's a recurring question, as the Pats' makeshift defense struggles to perform "just good enough." I say: It couldn't hurt. Why not back up the bread truck for Romeo Crennel? Wouldn't that be a beautiful reunion? And while we're at, do the same for Charlie Weis. (But with Charlie, just fill the truck with actual bread.)

2 TWO-SPORT ATHLETES (IN HONOR OF BO JACKSON'S BIRTHDAY)

VEZINA FOR VINCE
I've made a similar argument with Shaq, but wouldn't Vince Wilfork make an amazing NHL goalie? He can lie down in front of the net, or just stand there with his arms folded. He wouldn't even need a stick! Or pads.

KICK IT TO CARL
Carl Crawford was recruited to play quarterback at Nebraska. However, the Pats don't need a QB (and never will, because Tom Brady's playing forever!). But what the Pats do need is a kick returner, and even though Crawford's seen faster days, he's still better than anything they have. Think that guaranteed $122 million fits under the NFL cap?

3 ALTERNATE CELTIC CAREERS

KG at Sea Let's say they cancel the season, and Kevin Garnett needs (OK, wants) a second job: What would he do? Some probably envision him in a super-intense setting, but I see the opposite. I see him as a lighthouse attendant in Malibu. Days spent writing in his journal; nights staring blankly out at the ocean. Just KG learning about KG.

Baby Business I can't escape the image of Big Baby driving an ice cream truck. You know, singing along with the awful music, adoring every ounce of attention, quitting a week later after eating all the Choco Tacos.

Ray the Sommelier You're at dinner, struggling to make sense of a prodigious wine list, when all of a sudden he appears. Smooth, 6'5", dressed in designer duds. He starts talking about one specific blend, and keeps going, and going. By now, he's just rambling; he's not even making sense. But the words… they're so beautiful! You can't resist. You buy the whole case.

1 ONE MVP REACTION

When Justin Verlander was named MVP, I didn't feel bad for Jacoby Ellsbury; I felt bad for Pedro Martinez. Seriously, let's track down Pudge Rodriguez and make him hand over the 1999 trophy. Anyone have a number for Wilson Ramos' kidnappers? Let's make this happen.

4 DATES TO WATCH

12/4: I get why Colts vs. Pats was flexed from Sunday night, but it's a shame we won't get to hear Tony Dungy pick the Pats on national TV. (Or look like an ahole picking the Colts.)

12/5: The Bruins skate into Pittsburgh to face off with Sid the Kid. (Assuming he's not already Sid the Forcibly Retired.)

12/10: Only 10 weeks until pitchers and catchers report. No word on whether the Sox plan to hire a manager before then.

12/11: The Pats are in DC to take on the Redskins. Tune in before the game, as Mike Shanahan selects one lucky fan to start at running back!

"I'd like to go back to Iran, if we're ever allowed."

Soroff On ERIN BURNETT

The CNN anchor reports on the news industry, guilty pleasures and the feel of Trump's hairdo.

CNN PERSONALITY ERIN BURNETT, 35, was raised in Maryland and graduated from Williams College. She began her career in investment banking but transitioned to journalism and became the anchor of Street Signs and cohost of Squawk on the Street on CNBC. She has worked for Morning Joe, NBC Nightly News, Meet the Press and as a substitute anchor for Meredith Vieira on the Today show, not to mention appearing as a boardroom advisor to Donald Trump on The Apprentice. In October, she joined CNN and launched her new program, Erin Burnett OutFront. She is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and was named one of Fortune magazine's "Top 40 Under 40." She lives in New York City.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, to begin with, doesn't "OutFront" sound like a lesbian issues show?
Erin Burnett: [Laughs.] Well, I will say that when we ran it through legal, there were some gay and lesbian groups who have used that name. But, hey, they're out there pushing the envelope, and so are we, so that link is absolutely great as far as I'm concerned.

So you travel like a maniac. Top-three travel tips?
Never check a bag is number one, two and three. It's really important. After that, I'd say wearing clothes that are comfortable enough to sleep in on the plane but when you get off, you still look presentable. And using frequent flier miles to their full advantage.

Places you've been to for work that you'd go back to for a vacation?
I'd like to go back to Iran, if we're ever allowed. I'd like to see more of Russia. And I only went to South Africa on assignment, so that's pretty high on my list.

You've described your style as less polished than other TV journalists.
I have bad posture. Physically, people might come to the conclusion that I'm really relaxed, but that's actually what it is.

Is there anything you'd change about your appearance if it weren't for your job: a nose ring, leopard-print miniskirts?
A nose ring? No. But you always have the opportunity to get a little wild with your shoes, a little pop of color or dazzle.

Most ridiculous lengths you ever went to for a story?
Oh, there are lots. But one that comes to mind is lying in an ambulance plane to get into the Democratic Republic of Congo.

Fox News: fair and balanced?
It's a great moniker.

Is Al Roker secretly the meanest man on TV?
No. He's the ultimate example of being yourself on camera.

Which would be a bigger honor: being impersonated on Saturday Night Live or the punch line of a joke made by the president?
It depends on the joke, because who wants the president making fun of them? So I guess I'd have to go with Saturday Night Live because it'd be better than knowing the president secretly hated you.

Reporter you most admire?
There are a lot. But Tom Brokaw has been a really great mentor to me over the years. I've learned a lot from him. I also really admire Lesley Stahl. She's done so many different things so well, showed a lot of range, and I think sets an example for doing what you really love. Meredith Vieira, too, because she's at the top of her game but pulled back a little professionally to focus on other things in her life, and when she wanted to reengage, she did it on her own terms. She didn't let the beast or the machine take over.

Is The New York Times still the newspaper of record?
In some senses, yes. Their attitude has always been that their front page should be the front page for the world and not just New York. And they still have the International Herald Tribune, so I would say that it's a benchmark around the world. I do use a lot of other newspapers from around the world, though.

What's your favorite source of information?
I can't tell you that! Trade secrets! I do have sources that I use in South Asia and the Middle East that I find interesting, to see their op-eds and takes on things we cover. It doesn't surprise me when they're different, but it surprises me how often they're the same. Especially when it comes to issues where you'd expect them to be radically different.

Any guilty pleasures, like Dlisted, Us Weekly, TMZ?
I read all those weekly magazines at the gym, but with the new job, I haven't quite figured out how to get to the gym. But when I do, I read them on the bike, which doesn't say much for my workout regimen, I know.

Will you please tell Donald Trump that his hair ought to be a toilet seat cover?
I had a great hair moment with him. We were at CNBC doing this thing with an audience. This kid came out with his hair done in inch-and-a-half spikes. Donald doesn't usually let people touch his hair, but he and this kid were touching each other's hair. It was hilarious. I like how Donald can laugh about those things.

Do you miss investment banking at all?
Nope.

It's not considered as sexy as it once was.
It never was sexy. That always made me laugh. Investment banking is just really, really long hours for junior people. It's about not sleeping for a long period of your life. That's not sexy.

How do you straddle the line between being entertaining and presenting information that's a downer?
That's our challenge. I think it's what people want; they want both. But it's difficult, and it's important to segment properly.

Think you can get Anderson Cooper to have dinner with me?
For a fee, maybe. I've got a lot of people asking that, and I think it could become a nice little cottage industry. But I think CNN has a $50 gift limit. ✖✖✖

The Improper Presents:

WHAT YOUR HOLIDAY DECOR SAYS ABOUT YOU

THEY SAY YOU CAN JUDGE PEOPLE BY THEIR SHOES. WE SAY YOU CAN JUDGE THEM BY THEIR TREE (OR LACK THEREOF). AND WHAT'S MORE IN KEEPING WITH THE HOLIDAY SEASON THAN BEING JUDGMENTAL?

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

ALL WHITE LIGHTS

You're either Protestant or Catholic and of Northern European extraction, or wish to be perceived as such, even if you're black or your last name is Goldberg (hence the Hanukkah bush). A traditionalist, you're sure that white lights are the only thing Santa would consider liturgically correct, and any deviation from the basic green, white and red color scheme you secretly deem tacky. (Touches of silver and gold are OK, as long as they look expensive.) You're smolderingly resentful when the perfectly tasteful, carefully chosen gift you present from under the tree is reciprocated with something even more tasteful and carefully chosen. Your ornaments veer toward the nostalgic: choo-choo trains, bicycles, angels, etc. If time allows, you string cranberries and popcorn for a Victorian effect, and you're sure that Norman Rockwell would've painted your home had he seen it. You can never look at the Italian flag without thinking of Christmas.

COLORED LIGHTS

You're an exuberant free spirit who sees Christmas as a Disney extravaganza. Nonlinear thinking is your game, so you always forget to buy a gift for someone glaringly obvious, like your mom. For you, the highlight of the season is watching every special with Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire, and you insist that your sullen teenagers watch them with you. Snoopy figurines wearing Santa hats make you smile. The outside of your house is festooned with candy canes, inflatable snowmen and a lighting display that has made your neighbors threaten legal action. Your doctor should probably modify your dosage. If none of this describes you, you may simply be color-blind.

NO CHRISTMAS TREE

You're either non-Christian, agnostic, atheist, or have an abject hatred of vacuuming pine needles. Burning incense makes as much sense to you as decorating a dead conifer, and you think Christmas is a hassle-free day to fly somewhere with either palm trees or good skiing. Regardless of your beliefs, you feel a twinge of schadenfreude when you watch your neighbor wrestle his Christmas tree out to the sidewalk for garbage collection.

TABLETOP TREES

You have a dwarf fetish or are simply lazy. If the former, you own a figurine collection and a teacup poodle. If the latter, your idea of holiday cheer is a carton of eggnog. Because there's not much room for presents under your tree, you don't have to buy many, which you consider practical, virtuous and much easier to deal with than all that wrapping paper. Chances are, you live by yourself, and whether this is by choice or by circumstance, it allows you to eat cereal on Christmas morning in your underwear. You plan to plant your tree outside after the holidays and fantasize about watching it grow into a towering pine. You never actually get around to doing it.

CHARLIE BROWN TREE

You have an affinity for the underdog and are drawn to the bird with the broken wing. You're probably a yoga instructor or have flirted with the idea, however briefly. To you, the sound of the holidays is the sound of breaking glass, because your cat likes to swat the ornaments off your stunted Douglas fir. You're the first person to buy holiday crafts from the differently abled kid down the street, and you're blissfully unaware that he's going to use the cash to buy video games. You try desperately to get along with your type-A sister during the holidays, if only to demonstrate how much more evolved you are, but while doing the dishes after Christmas dinner, you engage in a screaming match over issues dating back to childhood. You can't wait for January so you can get that ugly thing out of your living room.

CUT YOUR OWN

You fancy yourself the rugged outdoorsy type and enjoy watching your family trudge through waist-deep snow. In truth, you're primarily sedentary and either a heavy smoker, 25 pounds overweight, or both. As a result, while hiking into the field, you're forced to stop frequently to ease your wheezing and pretend that you're simply surveying the pristine wilderness. You pick the tree that looks like it'll be easiest to strap to the roof of a Hyundai. The whole process makes you sweat profusely and you emanate steam on the car ride home, where you spend several hours trying to get your tree to remain upright in its stand. You brag about your adventure to everyone at work the next day, while inwardly swearing never to do it again. Precut tree lots make you angry. Your New Year's resolution is to quit smoking and get into better shape. You won't.

HANUKKAH BUSH

You're Jewish, or at least partly Jewish, but see no reason why the goyim should have all the fun. Your holiday color scheme is silver and blue, and you like Swarovski-crystal

Stars of David. You have at least two menorahs to balance things out, and while you insist on playing dreidel, you can never remember the rules. Instead of Hanukkah gelt, you receive Hanukkah guilt from your mother, who thinks it's a disgrace you put up anything at all and purposefully leaves out one ingredient when telling you your grandmother's potato latke recipe. You have presents under the tree for each day of the Festival of Lights, and on Christmas day, you go out for Chinese food and a movie.

FAKE TREE

You either live in Miami or morally object to cutting down a live tree (especially when the ones at Home Depot are so lifelike). If yours is one of those abstract, high-design, futuristic-looking pieces of sculpture, you're a gay interior designer. If yours is one of those convincing Norwegian spruces, you smugly tell anyone who'll listen that you don't need to water it. If yours is one of the pink metallic or other flashy varieties, you're probably a gay interior designer with a highly developed sense of irony. Whatever your reasons, the fact that you have a fake tree points to the likelihood that you've told a lie within the past 24 hours, and you're secretly terrified that Santa knows about it.

UNIFORM ORNAMENTS

Whether it's Wedgwood or Walt Disney, if your tree is restricted to a single theme of decoration, you've spent too much time A) in the military, or B) watching the Home Shopping Network. You're so anal-retentive that you use a level and a T square to wrap presents. Children are forbidden near your tree, and you take numerous photographs of it, which are indistinguishable from one year to the next. You've eaten the same thing for breakfast every morning for the past 12 years, and you only like snow before there are footprints. ×××

Something to Celebrate

Once upon a time, nights on the town during holiday season meant prim LBD's and staid suits. Nowadays, what's most festive is what's least expected: structural contours, striking hues and designs daring enough to take center stage in even our most hallowed of institutions.

Fresh Prints and Belle Hair

RHODES SCHOLAR

"IT'S HARD TO GET MORE extreme when your hair is already pink," confesses fashion grande dame Zandra Rhodes. Yet the British style pioneer who's dressed everyone from Princess Diana to Paris Hilton keeps one-upping her own creations. Since Rhodes opened her first shop in 1967, her zany prints and wacky designs have indelibly marked theater, makeup, bedding and even kitchenware. As a an empress of culture, she has an eye for high style. As for those who say Boston doesn't fill the bill? Utter tosh. "Just look at Isabella Stewart Gardner." Rhodes discusses her life, details her design process and doles out advice for creative minds at MassArt on Nov. 30. LINDSEY CANANT

Zandra Rhodes: A Lifelong Love Affair With Textiles Nov. 30, 6 pm at MassArt, Tower Auditorium, 621 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-879-7333) massart.edu.

Heart Felt Performance

Piano Men Rick Burkhardt, Alec Duffy and Dave Malloy's Three Pianos imagines a somber, snow-stranded evening where nerdy friends decide to play Franz Schubert's Winterreise. It sounds like a snooze, but things get tricky (and funny) as the crew starts drinking. Looking to wrap you into the fun, the American Repertory Theater promises a glass of wine with every ticket. Raise a toast to the trio Dec. 7–Jan. 8 at the Loeb Drama Center. Alan Tran

The Descendants ★★★ Despite never quite buying him as a cuckold, I enjoyed George Clooney's rumpled everyman turn in Alexander Payne's latest feature, adapted from Kaui Hart Hemmings' 2007 novel. When his cheating wife is critically injured in a boating accident during the opening credits, Clooney needs to step up and take charge of his family for the first time. The Descendants' plotless middle hour is particularly fantastic. Shailene Woodley's coltish awkwardness plays to the hesitation present in Clooney's relationship with his teen daughters, and Payne has a knack for letting scenes breathe and allowing his characters to surprise us. The central action in this very funny and often quite sad movie is Clooney stepping back and reevaluating everything and everybody he once took for granted. It feels like a transitional film for Payne, who has lost his young-man pitilessness and here reaches for a more accepting tone. It grows on you. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

50/50 ★★★ The prospect of dying young is no laughing matter, but in the case of 50/50, it makes for an extremely awkward, heartfelt and funny film. Directed by Jonathan Levine and written by Will Reiser, it has the rough sting of real life at its (slightly compromised) core. Reiser was diagnosed with a rare form of cancer in his early 20s. His loyal best friend during the ordeal was the kind of slovenly loudmouth usually played in movies by Seth Rogen. Except Reiser's best friend really is Seth Rogen, who always seems to turn up in movies as a variation of himself anyway. Joseph Gordon-Levitt stars here, and 50/50 is great at letting him and the other up-and-coming movie stars in the cast play to their strengths. The movie gets better as it goes along. "Did you ever see Terms of Endearment?" Gordon-Levitt asks at one point. The shaggy, laughing-through-the-tears M.O. of James L. Brooks' cable classic is obviously what 50/50 is striving for. Half the time it even gets there. (In the suburbs.)

Footloose ★★ You're probably wondering, "Why?" The answer is beside the point if you find yourself in line for director Craig Brewer's exuberant rehash of the silly 1984 musical. Original screenwriter Dean Pitchford is credited here, presumably because nobody even bothered changing most of the dialogue. It's the same movie with better dancing and worse acting. Much worse. Local boy Kenny Wormald stars as Ren McCormack, an out-of-town troublemaker new to the stuffy town of Bomont, where teenage dancing is a crime. Dennis Quaid takes over John Lithgow's role as the over-protective pastor, but how I wish they could've persuaded Kevin Bacon to take the part. Dancing With the Stars' Julianne Hough, who doesn't look a day under 30, plays the preacher's rebellious teenage daughter, and, once again, we spend a lot of time worrying about whether or not these kids will be allowed to have a prom. Mysteriously time-warped with popped collars and skinny ties, it's high energy, low-impact fluff. (In the suburbs.)

The Ides of March ★★★ Adapted by George Clooney, Grant Heslov and Beau Willimon from Willimon's off-Broadway play, The Ides of March stars Ryan Gosling as a suave Washington, D.C., up-and-comer working on a hotly contested primary campaign for Clooney's too-good-to-be-true contender. Solid, if a little stuffy, the film works best when it sticks with the day-to-day grind of a life in politics: stump speeches, poll numbers, TV spots and the right way to spin a story. Playing the Democratic wet dream of a candidate, Clooney can't resist laying out his own personal talking points on a variety of current issues. (I'd probably vote for him.) So why is this finely crafted, well-acted movie almost impossible to get excited about? For starters, the idea of corruption in politics is no great shakes. But I also think Clooney's clipped professionalism behind the camera might be to blame. The scene work is tight, concise and fully functional. Lean and no-nonsense, even during the more lurid second half, it ultimately feels smaller than it should. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

J. Edgar ★ ½ The worst thing about having heroes is that they always let you down. In many ways, J. Edgar Hoover is the classic Clint Eastwood character we've been watching since before Dirty Harry—a principled fellow who lets his workaholic

FELT EMOTIONS

Jason Segel helps Kermit and the gang make a comeback.

The Muppets ★★★½
Starring Jason Segel, Amy Adams, Chris Cooper, Walter, Kermit the Frog, Miss Piggy, Fozzie Bear, The Great Gonzo, Scooter, Alan Arkin and Jack Black. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

AS HOLLYWOOD'S recycling center continues its mission of re-booting, re-launching, CGI-ing and 3-D-ing an entire generation of young executives' childhood memories into franchise-ready properties, the prospect of a new Muppet movie was met with extremely cautious optimism.

Dormant on the big screen since 1999's reportedly dismal (I never saw it) Muppets From Space, Jim Henson's iconic creations have languished as fully owned subsidiaries of the Walt Disney Corporation. Jim Henson is dead. Frank Oz retired from puppetry and became a terrible filmmaker. Was the dream over?

But to my shock and delight, director James Bobin's The Muppets turns out to be a (mostly) marvelous return to form. Gloriously retro from start to finish, this proudly 2-D movie eschews computer animation in favor of felt puppets, embracing the vaudeville ethos of Henson's original TV program, in which silliness and sweetness go hand in hand.

Credit writer/costar Jason Segel, a Judd Apatow mainstay who cashed in his clout from the raunchy hit Forgetting Sarah Marshall for a chance to bring his old heroes back to the big screen. Segel's script (cowritten with his Sarah Marshall partner Nick Stoller) is an incredibly savvy bit of postmodern noodling, confronting the question everybody in the audience is already asking: after so long away, are The Muppets still relevant in our cynical modern world?

Segel stars as Gary, a rubber-limbed galoot who likes to wear matching outfits with his kid brother, Walter, a meek puppet who thinks he's a real boy. Gary's about to leave Smalltown, U.S.A. for the very first time, bringing his girlfriend, Mary (Amy Adams, reprising her wide-eyed cartoon performance from Enchanted), on a trip to Los Angeles to celebrate their 10th anniversary in style. At the last minute, Gary can't resist asking Walter to tag along, if only so they can visit the legendary Muppet Studio that brought them so much joy in TV reruns.

Alas, that old auditorium ain't what it used to be, having fallen into disrepair after an acrimonious split scattered the gang across the country. Even worse, there's a greedy Texas oil baron (Chris Cooper, having a ball) aiming to knock down the building and drill for black gold. This leaves a very limited window of time for Walter, Gary and Mary to get the Muppets back together, in the hopes that a telethon might raise the $10 million needed to save the studio.

So we meet the reluctant Kermit, estranged from his old friends and singing one of those heartbreaking Muppet songs of regret in his empty mansion. Miss Piggy has become a fashion editor in Paris (and Emily Blunt is her assistant, because Moi wears Prada). Fozzie works a run-down Reno tourist spot with a terrible cover band, but Scooter at least seems to be doing OK, since he works for Google.

It's a classic "getting the band back together" routine combined with a "Hey, let's put on a show!" narrative, which reintroduces beloved characters in witty and surprising ways. (In keeping with Henson's custom of always breaking the fourth wall, someone eventually suggests that the movie would go much faster if they rounded everybody up during a montage.)

The problem, of course, is that nobody cares about the Muppets anymore, at least according to a TV executive played by Rashida Jones. The characters must even ask themselves: Will people still tune in for an old-timey variety show? Poor Kermit exhausts his dusty Rolodex to land a celebrity host: "Is President Carter available?"

Bobin's deliberately candy-colored palette accentuates the wonderful artifice. In the grand Muppet tradition, all the characters know they're in a movie and are self-aware without being smarmy. Bret McKenzie, of Flight of the Conchords fame, wrote many of the new songs and understands that fundamental balance between silliness and pathos.

Segel and company get the effervescent spirit so right it's easy to forgive a few noncrucial missteps. For starters, humans in a Muppet movie serve just as much purpose as those boring romantic couples in later Marx Brothers pictures—a necessary distraction. There's a bit too much to-do over Gary and Mary's relationship woes, bogging down the bouncy proceedings.

But any such complaints are rendered moot by the singing-and-dancing extravaganza that rounds out the third act. It would be churlish to give too much away, save to say that Camilla and her chickens clucking Cee-Lo Green's "F You" made me happier than any musical number of the past 20 years. This extended sequence did the impossible, because I laughed at Jack Black.

And then there's "The Rainbow Connection," a song that remains haunting in ways I still can't quite put into words. At its best, The Muppets honors that magical mix of chaotic comedy and resounding melancholy.

It's good to have them back. ✖✖✖ tendencies and private codes destroy his personal life, until moral gray areas blur into darkness. Except this film feels like a school play. Swathed in horrible old-age makeup for the majority of J. Edgar's running time, Leonardo DiCaprio rants and raves to a collection of biographers, providing lazy narration where none is required. This closeted, ham-fisted Hoover is a chore to spend time with (as his real life counterpart probably was), and I endured most of J. Edgar just wishing to get away from him. There's no outside perspective, no relief from his drama queen shenanigans. It's a deeply silly movie; American history as kitsch, played out like a drag show. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jack and Jill NO STARS Isn't this exactly the kind of movie Adam Sandler was ragging on in Funny People? Apparently there's nothing more amusing than a comedian in a fat suit and a dress, but Sandler's venture into Big Momma's House territory is appalling, even by the half-assed standards of Happy Madison productions. Horribly directed by Dennis Dugan, Jack and Jill finds Sandler starring as both a successful commercial director and his bovine twin sister, a woman who leaves sweat stains on the bed when she sleeps and speaks in a grating sketch-comedy voice. Somewhere in the midst of all this arrives Al Pacino, playing himself as a lonely horndog with the hots for Sandler in drag. Hoo-ha-ing his way into grotesque self-parody, Pacino must've gotten jealous when he saw Bobby DeNiro's Fockers paychecks. The movie stops dead in its tracks so Michael Corleone can rap a commercial for Dunkin' Donuts. It's the worst Adam Sandler picture yet, and that's saying something. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Like Crazy ★ There's an oft-quoted axiom I wish more young writers would heed: Just because it happened to you, doesn't make it interesting. Director Drake Doremus' semi-autobiographical tale of young lovers torn apart by immigration laws is as excruciating to sit through as anything I've seen this year. Anton Yelchin and Felicity Jones star as two dull college kids who fall in love during a bunch of montages and never come up with anything to say to each other. He designs furniture and has a thing about chairs. She's British. There endeth the character development. She stupidly overstays her visa, and then is shocked to find that this presents a problem when she attempts to return. Instead of doing anything sensible like allowing her rich family to intervene, the two instead mope on separate continents, texting each other while listening to sad music. The shockingly poor digital photography looks like it was shot on a 15-year-old camcorder, and I can't for the life of me figure out how this got released. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Margin Call ★★★ Sympathy for the one percent. First-time writer/director J.C. Chandor does his best David Mamet impression in this thriller about a Wall Street investment bank pulling an all-nighter on the verge of the 2008 market collapse. It's hard to feel bad for these people, but Chandor does a yeoman's job projecting a culture predicated on a lie, where all the money and gross profits can only last for so long before the music finally stops. Of particular note is Paul Bettany as a swaggering master of the universe only gradually discovering that the fast times are finally over. Equally affecting is Kevin Spacey as the firm's dumbstruck mentor, finally delivering a great performance after countless years of mundane drivel. I still have no idea what Demi Moore is doing in this movie, and the dying dog symbolism reeks of rank amateurism. (There really is a pet that needs to be put down, like the firm.) But Chandor's dialogue dazzles, and the gleaming surfaces cast a toxic spell. (At Coolidge Corner, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Martha Marcy May Marlene ★★★★ The title is a mouthful, but that's kind of the point. Writer/director Sean Durkin's astonishing debut is all about a loss of identity and the slippery slope between the past and the present. It's impossible to know what in this film is just a dream, or, more likely, a nightmare. Played by Elizabeth Olsen (yes, kid sister to those odious twins), Martha is first glimpsed fleeing from a cult compound deep in the deceptively soothing woods of the Catskills. She makes a panicked phone call to her estranged sister Lucy (Sarah Paulson), but right away we can tell that something isn't right. In the style of vintage Polanski, Durkin's confident film uses long takes and tension within compositions to conjure a consuming sense of unease. There's something off about the camera angles and the space between these characters. We're left stranded between identities, trapped in the tragic limbo of a doomed girl with too many names and no idea what any of them stand for. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Melancholia ★★★★ There's a massive planet on a collision course with Earth, but knowing writer/director Lars Von Trier, we're probably more interested in its metaphorical implications. Kirsten Dunst stars as the less-interesting bipolar sister born into a family of privilege, rapid-cycling her way through one of the worst weddings ever captured on film. Granted, she never had a chance to begin with, as her mom (Charlotte Rampling) is going quietly nuts in the guest bedroom while papa (John Hurt) wrestles around with double dates. Family and friends self-destruct in blackly comic fashion throughout the shenanigans, and Dunst's Justine becomes a punishing sociopath. Full disclosure: I spent the better (and worst) parts of last year in a relationship with somebody I loved who suffered from a similar disorder. Melancholia scorched me to my core and left me unable to speak for an hour afterwards. Has there ever been a better metaphor for depression than a gigantic dark planet bearing down on you from the cosmos? (At Kendall Square.)

Moneyball ★★★ ½ Brad Pitt finally surrenders and turns in the kind of megawatt movie-star performance we've all been waiting for. As a pal noted, "He's playing the role exactly the way Robert Redford would've in the 1970s." Based on Michael Lewis' best seller, Moneyball stars Pitt as Oakland A's general manager Billy Beane, a once-promising player who washed out young. Now he's stuck trying to run a financially crippled franchise in a league where the big teams have gotten so rich that the smaller markets have been priced right out of the competition. All this inside-baseball talk is served up for your consideration by screenwriter Aaron Sorkin, who puts his trademark rapid-fire banter in the service of surprisingly sturdy and traditional underdog-sports-movie formulas. When it's at its best, Moneyball is preposterously entertaining, as Beane and partner in crime Peter Brand (Jonah Hill) hustle sports agents, owners and rival GMs. It's a movie about the game of

Out of This World Too often, alien invasions mean cities blown to pieces or 90 minutes of Will Smith acting too cool for school. When Steven Spielberg released E.T.: the Extra-Terrestrial in 1982, the survival guide read a little something like this: one bag of Reese's Pieces, a phone with a really good long-distance plan, a bicycle fit for an aerial escape and Drew Barrymore as your adorable little sister. It's a lot more fun than sitting through three hours of Avatar. The classic invades the Coolidge Corner Theatre Dec. 2-3 and ArtsEmerson on Dec. 3.

baseball that contains surprisingly little actual baseball. It's more like The Bad News Bears with an economics degree. (In the suburbs.)

My Week with Marilyn ★★ Simon Curtis' adaptation of Colin Clark's suspect memoir is a great big slab of fan-fiction; a film that follows the template of 2008's Me and Orson Welles as a banal wish-fulfillment fantasy for movie buffs. Charmless Eddie Redmayne plays Clark, an idealist with silver-screen dreams, working a thankless job on Sir Laurence Olivier's The Prince and the Showgirl. Olivier, played with what looks like a prosthetic chin by Kenneth Branagh, cast American bombshell Marilyn Monroe as his costar, assuming he'd get to sleep with her. Michelle Williams, an actress apparently incapable of giving a bad performance, is the picture's lone saving grace. The Monroe va-va-voom is very clearly just another one of Norma Jean's costume changes, and the real pleasure of Williams' work is watching her flip her sex-kitten routine on and off like a light switch. One can't help wondering what a serious movie about Marilyn Monroe might've been like with the fearless Williams in the role, but this is little more than the masturbatory fancies of Redmayne's nonentity. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

The Skin I Live In ★★ ½ After floundering in recent years with sentimental Oscar bait, Pedro Almodóvar's cheerful return to perversity reunites him with his 1990s muse, Antonio Banderas. Here Banderas delivers a shocker of a performance as a vindictive plastic surgeon haunted by a laundry list of past tragedies that pile up in a telenovela fashion. Ingeniously employing a flashback structure that eliminates any possible critique without giving away the movie's most shocking secrets, it's only safe to reveal that Banderas' surgeon has been perfecting genetically engineered replacement skin with an unwilling human guinea pig locked in his elaborate home laboratory. There's some audacious messing with gender roles, and as usual, Almodóvar reels in a metric ton of winking classic film references, calling out everything from Franju's Eyes Without a Face to Hitchcock's Vertigo. The problem is the leaden pacing. Material this outré demands a dizzy, headlong pace, yet the director remains curiously detached and slowpokey. Twenty minutes tighter and this might've been something amazing. (At Kendall Square.)

Tower Heist ★★ Brett Ratner's pandering Ocean's 11 knockoff stars Ben Stiller as a "working class" building manager for a luxury midtown Manhattan complex. Alan Alda plays a slimy, wannabe Bernie Madoff who has made off with the staff's pension funds in a Ponzi scheme. The only exciting thing about Tower Heist is that Eddie Murphy—playing a boyhood reprobate pal of Stiller's—actually seems to be trying again. (It's been a rough decade or two for us fans.) In full-on Billy Ray Valentine mode, Murphy lends these lugubrious proceedings a shot in the arm, constantly hinting at a filthier movie happening somewhere just outside the frame. Stiller's notorious ego is well represented, hogging most of the running time with his put-upon Queens drawl (he sounds like a parody of blue-collar Boston, dropping R's left and right). Brett Ratner continues to be the most anonymous filmmaker working today, with every cut and music cue arriving exactly where expected. Such a shame Murphy finally came back to play for such hackwork. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn—Part One ★ Wait, what just happened? Sadly lacking the wherewithal to slog my way through Stephenie Meyer's subliterate phenomenon, this reviewer was unprepared for the gonzo plot turns of the series' final chapter, which has been cravenly split into two films for reasons of commercial calculation and severe artistic demerit. Having spent the past three movies begging to get banged by her sparkly vampire boyfriend, Edward (Robert Pattinson, acting with his hair again), Kristen Stewart's 18-year-old Bella is finally deflowered and impregnated in a thunderous anticlimax. I can't even begin to parse all the creepy anti-sex, body-horror, abortion debate issues bubbling around the ugly subtext, as I was too distracted by the gang of wolves having a psychic strategy discussion just outside the birth chamber. It looked like an outtake from Up. (I may or may not have shouted "Squirrel!" in a crowded theater.) And all that was before the toothy vampire episiotomy. Then a werewolf falls in love with a baby. People really read this garbage? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

UNDER THE INFLUENCE

Small orchestra Pink Martini spins expansive global pop.

Pink Martini plays at Berklee Performance Center Dec. 16–17.

James Chiang

'IT'S BEEN A COMPLICATED year," Pink Martini pianist and bandleader Thomas Lauderdale says. "I'm glad that we've survived it." But his "little orchestra," which plays what he calls "old-fashioned, symphonic global pop," has done more than survive.

It's met challenges with creativity, starting in June when longtime singer China Forbes announced that she'd take a year off to recover from vocal-cord surgery. Forbes, who sings in French, Arabic, Italian and Japanese as well as English, has fronted the Oregon group practically since its inception in 1994.

Rather than slowing down, Pink Martini has maintained a busy schedule by using guest singers such as Massachusetts-born sparkplug Storm Large. For the band's Dec. 16–17 shows at Berklee Performance Center, Large splits vocals with NPR correspondent Ari Shapiro and Japanese star Saori Yuki, who collaborated with the group on the new album 1969.

"She has a huge career in Japan, but nowhere else," Lauderdale says of Yuki, who he describes as her country's Streisand. "It's like bringing her to the rest of the world."

"It makes it much more interesting for everybody involved to have a multiplicity of sounds," Lauderdale says. "In the same way that I've liked to have songs in different languages, it's nice to have different voices."

That variety is showcased on Pink Martini's latest three self-released albums, all sure to be highlighted in their Boston concerts.

In addition to 1969, which sports songs from that year sung in Japanese, the group released the career-spanning A Retrospective. Just last year, Pink Martini released the holiday album Joy to the World, which included a Ukrainian bell carol, a Hebrew prayer, a Chinese New Year tune and an "Auld Lang Syne" samba. "So it's all over the map," says Lauderdale.

The pianist grew up in Indiana in a multicultural family of adopted children, which he says "definitely reflected on my perspective," before they moved to Oregon when he was 12.

> "I was going to run for office, but I got distracted by this terrible music that was playing at these political fund-raisers."

But the seeds of Pink Martini were sown at Harvard, where Lauderdale and Forbes shared a dormitory. He was studying history and literature while she concentrated on painting and English. "But actually it was mostly throwing parties," quips Lauderdale, now 41. The duo would also join up for late-night arias. "She'd sing Puccini, and I'd be her little accompanist."

Otherwise, Lauderdale claims he didn't pursue music during his college years except for a few stints at the Boston gay bar Club Café, where he played "this hideous white piano during dinner, often in drag."

When he returned to Oregon, Lauderdale set his sights on politics. "I was going to run for office to become the next mayor of Portland, but I got distracted by this terrible music that was playing at these political fund-raisers," he says. "I started the band to provide a fabulous backdrop for political causes."

Pink Martini began as a four-piece combo. "I was wearing cocktail dresses, and it was very campy," Lauderdale says. But soon, he lured Forbes from New York to join the group, and out of that grew today's eclectic, cosmopolitan outfit.

"People joined gradually," Lauderdale recalls from an Arizona tour stop. "The music itself is almost old-fashioned Hollywood, so it really makes sense to have a small orchestra."

Mixing standards and originals, Pink Martini delights in quoting classical pieces, old movie tunes, jazz melodies and Latin rhythms, even in the course of a single song.

"Sometimes it works, and sometimes it doesn't," Lauderdale says. "There's music in almost every culture and language, so there's no shortage of material from which to be inspired."

Also exciting is the news that Forbes has recovered from her surgery more quickly than expected and will join Pink Martini for a Dec. 3 concert with the Seattle Symphony.

"She sounds great, better than she ever sounded," he says. "I was really worried whether the band would be able to function without her. Happily, we found that everything wasn't lost.... It just made everything more interesting." ✖✖✖

Cutoff Date

Stone-cold Prepare to bundle up as the Great White North descends on Boston. In advance of the season's inevitable snowpocalypse, indie-band Hey Rosetta! arrives from Canada. The six-piece group achieves a quasi-orchestral sound with layers of classic pop-rock instrumentals on bass, violin and cello. High-energy songs with longing, nostalgic lyrics evoke changing seasons, young love and bends in the road. Learn what Hey Rosetta! is all "aboot" at Great Scott on Nov. 30.

Hip to Be Square

Blue Steel Sculptor Rainer Lagemann is a master of the human form, capturing its complexity with simple shapes. Using metal squares, he depicts the body's many turns and articulations, like those of a man's torso or of a woman's hand. Perched upon buildings in Miami and flying from cliffs in California, these still sculptures seem to take a kinetic turn by virtue of airy, jostled geometries. With Lagemann's balance of delicacy and strength, harsh 90-degree angles are the building blocks of a complex body of art. See his work in the flesh at the DTR Modern Gallery through Dec. 29. Kathleen Godbold

To Grandmother's House We Go

Nothing's better than your own grandmother's food, but Avrom Honig would like you to try his Bubbe's. Thanks to their popular YouTube channel, his beloved 84-year-old granny's challah, latkes and kugel are being cooked up in kitchens around the country. Now every recipe has been compiled into Feed Me Bubbe, a cookbook that's sprinkled with anecdotes on life and love. Honig and Bubbe share snacks and stories at Brookline Booksmith on Dec. 4. Kathleen Godbold

CAST A SPELL

Wicked Witchcraft

Walpurgisnacht came early this year, when the Boston Lyric Opera hosted Hocus Pocus: An Operatic Trip to the Dark Side. The annual gala, held at the Mandarin Oriental, blended elements of Halloween, Macbeth and even a bit of Beetlejuice to create a sophisticatedly macabre evening. Among the costumed throng: co-chairs Willa and Taylor Bodman, Alan Dynner and Lisa Grenier, honoree Miguel de Braganca and the lovely Suki, opera stalwarts Steve and Jane Akin, eminence grise Ted Cutler, the zesty Joanne Dickinson, iconoclasts Yvonne and Stuart Madnick, über-philanthropists Ray and Maria Stata, WGBH-TV Channel 2 cutie Jared Bowen and other opera buffs.

The evening's menu read like a Harry Potter novel: The main course was bonfire-roast lamb shank on primeval ancient grains with blistered Brussels sprouts, butter-braised carrots and deep forest mushrooms. Between courses, guests were serenaded by the BLO's emerging artists, who performed numbers like "You Can't Cut Your Momma Up in Massachusetts" (an homage to Lizzie Borden) and assorted other ditties. But even more entertaining was hearing one woman, dressed as a witch, tell her husband, "One more joke about how this is the real me, and you'll be sleeping in the guest room."

At Least They Changed the Sheets

To say that the Institute of Contemporary Art's 75th anniversary party was over-the-top is putting it mildly. Guests at the gala arrived at the museum only to be transported (via disco trolleys) to a secret location, which turned out to be an airplane hangar at Logan.

Some 700 people entered through the triumphal arch of a 757 and were greeted by waiters holding trays of drinks. Dinner included a dance performance by Rashaad Newsome, food by Ken Oringer and enough wine to float the Queen Mary.

Present and accounted for: the ever-delightful Fotene Demoulas and her husband, Tom Cote, mega-philanthropists Paul and Katie Buttenweiser, Akris CEO Melissa Beste (who might've won the award for best-dressed), travel titans Alan and Harriet Lewis, biking behemoth Andy Levine, the ever-affable Dan Fireman, honoree Barbara Krakow, the devilishly handsome Arnold Sapenter, hair deity Mario Russo, nightlife kingpin Patrick Lyons and the stunning Kristina, the brothers Casey (Mike and Joe), and every other art-loving socialite in Boston. After dinner, it was back to the ICA for a dance party, enlivened by a whole new horde of hipsters. Among them: gallery owner Miguel de Braganca (the younger), filmmaker Lorna Lowe, international man of mystery Christian Bailey and others of an equally sparkly ilk. The evening's most amusing exchange: Three friends discovered they had all stayed in the same cabin at the Vermont resort Twin Farms, prompting one of them to say, "We've all had sex in the same bed. Ew."

Mark Schwindenhammer at the BLO gala

Andy Levine and Esther Kim at the ICA party

Kristina and Patrick Lyons at the ICA party

Mayor Menino and Janet Wu at the Silk Road Gala

Bridget Quinn and Kathleen Breen Combes at the Night of Stars after-party

Adiarys Almeida and Irlan Silva at the Night of Stars after-party

I'll Take Chinese Statesmen for 400, Please, Alex

The best pan-Asian buffet this side of Hong Kong was only part of the charm of the Silk Road Gala, a fund-raiser for the Asian Task Force Against Domestic Violence.

Held at the Sheraton, the event included a cooking demonstration by Ming Tsai and his sous chef, Mayor Menino, while guests rubbed elbows with the likes of pint-sized pistol Janet Wu, attorney at large Ed Amaral, and one guest who wondered aloud and in earnest, "So who, exactly, was General Gao?"

No Accounting for Taste

It's hard to say which was more impressive: the Night of Stars performance at the Opera House, or the after-party at the Ritz, where members of Boston Ballet joined guests going nuts on the dance floor—including a re-creation of the sit-spin that won Brian Boitano the gold at the 1988 Olympics.

The evening began with an elegant dinner, but it was the after-party where people let their hair down (including one woman who said it reminded her of her misspent youth at Studio 54). The party also marked Mikko Nissinen's 10th anniversary as artistic director, and on hand to help him celebrate were such balletomanes as silver fox Pamela Humphrey and her husband, John, brunette bombshell Eve Rounds, the amazingly named Pixley Schiciano, petite fireball Audrey Reny and so on and so forth.

The evening's most amusing comment: "La Bayadere isn't my favorite ballet. It's like an opium addict's version of The Nutcracker." ×××

The IMPROPER

Brave New World

The year ends with thrilling news. NASA astronomers have discovered Kepler-22b, a possibly habitable planet a mere 600 light years away from our own completely habitable, not-about-to-come-to-a-rolling-boil world. They say that Kepler-22b may be blue and balmy, with an average surface temperature of 72 degrees F, which would make it suitable for picnicking. It might feasibly sustain life. More than likely, it's home to a race of serene, hyper-intelligent shellfish people who gently dance among strands of gossamer seaweed, trilling paeans to the Great Oceanic Spirit. They sound delicious dipped in melted butter. Still, in light of the extinguishing vastness of the cosmos, it's nice to know we could maybe nip next door to borrow a cup of ozone when ours runs out.

On the other hand, scientists have also just discovered two supermassive black holes, far bigger than the black holes of their worst, dark-matter-soiled nightmares. One of them has a mass of about 20 billion suns. This is the astronomical equivalent of learning that spiders do, actually, grow as big as Toyotas. These spacetime abominations lurk at the edge of the galaxy, sucking up light and matter while producing nothing of value, like that weird intern who always creeped everyone out by hanging around silently in doorways. Scary.

The lesson here is that every silver lining has its giant star-gobbling vortex. Also, the universe, in all its infinite variety, is more anarchic than a toddler's birthday party. A toast, then, to Kepler-22b: Happy New Year, and long may you avoid the attentions of supermassive black holes. And humans.

Bear in Mind

PARTY ANIMAL

HE MOVES THROUGH a tangle of tulle. He leaps and spins wearing a six-pound helmet. He faces surreptitious flash photography, the distraction only lessened by the fact that the costume's eyes float inches above his own. It's difficult being the Bear in Boston Ballet's holiday classic. As Robert Kretz, who's played the part since 2006, says, "You look cute just standing there, so it doesn't matter," but in Mikko Nissinen's production the normally staid role is given a 45-second solo. And while the name may not appear on the marquee, his character becomes the star. Says Kretz, "The audience could give a s about the Nutcracker; they want to see the Bear."

NICK ALTSCHULLER

Good Eats

Making the Rounds

You wouldn't think twice about making a special trip for the best pizza, barbecue or burger. Tortillas, on the other hand, are an item on the shopping list, not the weekend itinerary. But now that chef Jamie Mammano (of Mistral and Sorellina fame) is making fresh corn tortillas, it's worth bypassing the grocery aisle for a drive out to his Chelsea storefront. These rich, rough-hewn, nutty discs—not to mention his chips, tostadas and masa—are an altogether different breed that will add an extra dimension to your culinary creations. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Beauty

A Lesser Shade of Pale

Self-tanning lotions used to make you smell like old Havarti and turn you the color of a traffic cone. A second generation (mostly spray-ons and mousses) only made you smell like slightly fresher Havarti, and turned you the color of cantaloupe. My recent mission was to scour the shelves and sites for the latest self-tanner formulas. Verdict: The newest crop isn't perfect, but it's better than ever before. Here's who came out on top.

L'Oréal Sublime Bronze Self-Tanning Towelettes Yields a natural (enough) café au lait hue, with a scent that's tempered by a thin floral fragrance. Choose the medium-toned version, or take your chances on a good skin-tone match. $9.37 AT CVS.COM

Clarins Delectable Self Tanning Mousse SPF 15 A whipped cream–like texture prevents streaking (though a steady hand's still key), and the subtle fruit fragrance masks the smell until it fades five hours later. Bonus: It's delicate enough to use on your face. $42 AT MACY'S, 450 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON (617-357-3000) MACYS.COM

Mystic Perfect Tan Kit Face Includes a moisturizing base to smooth skin, a spray-on formula that applies easily and a gold-pigmented finishing cream. Terrific application and nearly zero stench, but skip the final step if you'd rather not rock a J. Lo sheen. $54 AT BEAUTY.COM

Fusion Beauty AirGlow Airbrush Gun Salon-perfect results that last through at least two to three showers. Mildly odiferous for the first six hours before all smell fades. Just be sure to exfoliate, shave and cover your hands in cream beforehand, as streaking can be a hazard. AIRBRUSH GUN AND 4 OZ. TINTED TAN MIST, $175 AT BEAUTYBRIDGE.COM

St. Tropez Everyday Gradual Tan Mousse It won't transform you from pasty to golden in hours, but that's the point; it's meant to be applied in layers, until the perfect color is achieved. A newfangled fragrance technology promises to cut the unpleasant aroma down—and it actually does. $30 AT SEPHORA, PRUDENTIAL CENTER, 600 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON (617-262-4200) SEPHORA.COM

WHAT A DRAG

Hollywood legend George Hamilton, 72, stars in the national touring company production of La Cage aux Folles at the Citi Performing Arts Center Shubert Theatre through Dec. 18.

What attracted you to* La Cage?
Every three or four years I start thinking about doing a play. You need to morph and reinvent yourself if you want to stick around. I loved the show because the relationships are so interesting. The entire process of getting this going took nine months. Children come quicker!

Is playing such a flashy character going to ruin your clout with the opposite sex?
Not at all. The people who see this show—even the more conservative folks in Middle America—are touched by the universal emotions. In the beginning, La Cage was an anthem, and it still is. It's about being true to yourself and those that you've loved.

Are the kids from Jersey Shore stealing your tanning thunder?
The National Enquirer once said that I had skin cancer. They called me for a quote and asked what I was doing for treatment. I said "sitting on the balcony." Since I've been on the road, my tan has definitely faded. I'm due for a vacation, though.

Any favorite memory from Boston?
I lived at 28 Chestnut Street in Beacon Hill when I was a kid. My mother was married to Carleton Hunt in the 1950s. They were "proper Bostonians," but my mother was a true Southern belle. One year she decided to do a holiday drive for needy children, and it came up a little short. She went to Filene's Basement and spent a fortune on gifts for strangers and was branded Mrs. Santa Claus. They got divorced soon after, and we left Boston. KYLE WRIGHT

Shiraz Revisited

Five years ago, Australian shiraz was the cool red everyone was drinking. Today, the bottles seem to have lost their luster. Issues arise when a varietal becomes fashionable too fast, the chief of which is that quality can become diluted. But don't count shiraz out just yet. Poised for a comeback, the reasons shiraz once reigned—rich, spicy flavor, easy to drink, versatile with food—still apply. The following blind-tasting winners work beautifully with traditional holiday fare.

McWilliams "Hanwood Estate" Shiraz SOUTHEASTERN AUSTRALIA, 2010 ($14, GARY'S) There's an appealing fragrance of sweet herbs, cola and red berries. Medium-bodied, it's ripe and satisfying in flavor with sharp acidity. Very well balanced, and a bargain at the price, McWilliams makes a casual wine that would work with a variety of white meat or fish dishes.

Layer Cake Shiraz SOUTH AUSTRALIA, 2010 ($16, ALLSTON WINE SHOP) With Layer Cake, the name says it all: pure, decadent pleasure. This is a richer and more concentrated shiraz featuring aromas of licorice, cocoa and black fruits. It's silky and lush with powerful fruit extraction but soft tannins. While good with juicy meat dishes, it's hard to resist just on its own.

Elderton Shiraz BAROSSA, 2008 ($30, THE WINE EMPORIUM) Barossa is the royalty region for the varietal, and this powerhouse from Elderton doesn't disappoint. There's a whiff of tobacco and wildflowers, while the flavor is quite savory, with pepper and mocha accents. Soft, mellow and balanced, this is what I'd serve with well-seasoned, or even barbecued, meat—but the truth is that it's another one of those anytime wines.

Behaving Badly

For us sinners, New Year's is a good time to atone. Here's a guide to charities that can leaven the guilt.

PRIDE

Example: Acting like the insufferable fan who worships trophies like false idols. In local bars, you're tolerated. Outside New England, you're marked for retribution.

Penitence: Teach kids a healthy appreciation for sports through Big Brothers Big Sisters of Massachusetts Bay.

BIG BROTHERS BIG SISTERS OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY, 75 FEDERAL ST., BOSTON (617-542-9090) BBBSMB.ORG

ENVY

Example: Visiting a friend's dazzling condo in the South End and hearing her complain about her decorator's fees.

Penitence: Lend a hand at Habitat for Humanity, which builds homes for low-income families.

HABITAT FOR HUMANITY GREATER BOSTON, 240 COMMERCIAL ST., BOSTON (617-423-2223) HABITATBOSTON.ORG

WRATH

Example: Seeing red during the September Sox meltdown, but really getting mad with the "beer and Popeyes in the clubhouse" debacle.

Penitence: Give your Fenway-fraught indignation a healthier outlet by supporting Fenway Health, assisting HIV/AIDS patients, GLBT individuals and others through advocacy, help lines and medical care.

FENWAY HEALTH, 1340 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON (617-267-0900) FENWAYHEALTH.ORG

Example: Having your personal concierge bring you a $3,000 cashmere tracksuit.

Penitence: Support InnerCity Weightlifting, a program that takes teenage gang members and victims of violence off the streets and into the gym with trainers and mentors.

INNERCITY WEIGHTLIFTING, 23 HARDWICK ST., SUITE 2, CAMBRIDGE (413-335-3547) INNERCITYWEIGHTLIFTING.ORG

GREED

Example: Pepper-spraying your fellow Wal-Mart shoppers to get a $2 waffle iron.

Penitence: Get your adrenaline rush by giving to Rosie's Place, an advocacy group for homeless women and children.

ROSIE'S PLACE, 889 HARRISON AVE, BOSTON (617-442-9322) ROSIESPLACE.ORG

GLUTTONY

Example: Ordering the "Big Rig" meat bonanza at Sweet Cheeks and asking for a single fork.

Penitence: Volunteer at Food for Free, collecting fresh food that would've otherwise gone to waste from farms, supermarkets and restaurants, and distributing it to emergency services.

FOOD FOR FREE, 11 INMAN ST., CAMBRIDGE (617-868-2900) FOODFORFREE.ORG

LUST

Example: Tweeting a photo of a deeply personal nature, then claiming your account was hacked.

Penitence: The traditional byproduct of lust is progeny. So support Cradles to Crayons, which collects clothing and children's items for kids living in poor or low-income households.

CRADLES TO CRAYONS, 155 NORTH BEACON ST., BOSTON (617-779-4700) CRADLESTOCRAYONS.ORG

Drink of the Moment

FABLE BODIED

NAME: Hansel and Gretel.

INGREDIENTS: Becherovka, Baileys Original Irish Cream, Compass Box Peat Monster Scotch, Gosling's Stormy Ginger Beer.

PRICE: $12.

GARNISH: Crumbles of house-made smoked gingerbread.

INVENTORS: Trish "the Dish" LaCount and Jay Grant.

PREDICTION: LaCount expects Becherovka to become "the next Fernet."

LITERARY FIDELITY (OUT OF 10): 6.8. Made with Compass Box Scotch, its smokiness recalls the witch being burned in the oven. Though points were deducted for a lack of cannibalism, the cocktail ranks far above the 2002 film adaptation of the fairy tale. Starring Taylor Momsen, Lynn Redgrave and Delta Burke, that cinematic gem garnered just 3.2 of 10 points on Rotten Tomatoes.

INTERACTIVITY: The Scotch arrives in a pipette, so you can add as much or as little as you'd like. Unsure how much to include? "It all depends on how much you hate that witch," LaCount advises.

GRATUITOUS HOLIDAY PUNS: Santos' sleigh, LaCountdown to Christmas, It's a Wonderful Libation, Maccabuzzed.

CAUGHT IN THE ACT

TO THE TWO FEMALE LOW-LIFES: I saw you steal the children's cart from the CambridgeSide Galleria on Thursday, Dec. 1. It was closing time, and there wasn't any security around. You were carrying it down the stairs, while practicing your speech in case someone stopped you. Not only are you both thieves, you're bad liars. This is a great example to set for your child, but I'm sure you don't care. Honesty is the best policy

A lesson in office politics:

Social skills play a big part in office popularity, and you, my dear, are sorely lacking in both. It's probably because you were a loner in high school… and college. But the reason no one likes you isn't because they're jealous of your expansive vocabulary or library of pretense. It's because you're a huge b*. Taking out your own unhappiness on everybody else might make you feel good for an afternoon, but someday, karma will come back around and bite you on your elitist behind. If you so desperately want to be the boss' pet, you ought to be careful not to play both sides. Just saying

To the friendly MBTA worker at Davis Square:

Thank you so much for letting me sneak by without my Charlie Card. I was running incredibly late and was able to catch that train. I promise I'm a monthly pass purchaser! Sometimes the benefit of the doubt is a really sweet gesture. If I ever see you again, expect a hug. Charlie's angel

TURNING A NEW LEAF

Two months ago, the crowd outside the departed Revolution Rock Bar mainly consisted of Snooki-wannabes in cheap heels and guys flexing chemically enhanced biceps. But now the High Street location is worth a second look, thanks to a thorough overhaul.

The result is Julep Bar, an upscale lounge that couldn't be more stylistically opposed to its predecessor. Sure, you can still order a gin and tonic, but there's a list of craft cocktail offerings from neighboring Blue Inc.'s mad-scientist Trish LaCount. At Julep, she swaps her liquid nitrogen kit for history books. "I'm more concerned about making the best version of a classic cocktail," she says, assembling the icy Julep ($12) that inspired the space's moniker. Other drinks include the Champagne Bowler ($12), a popular cocktail in the '40s, and the seminal Bond favorite Vesper ($11).

Corners that once harbored beer-chugging Northeastern coeds now boast—thanks to interior designer Taniya Nayak—tufted ostrich-embossed banquettes or moveable ottomans that allow for customizable seating arrangements. The bar has been modernized with a glowing backdrop that can change color for the desired mood, and the DJ booth has been relocated to allow passersby a glance through the expansive windows.

SHE SWAPPED HER LIQUID NITROGEN KIT FOR HISTORY BOOKS.

"My personal goal is to get the four-to-10 crowd," LaCount says. Picking up the white collars that work in the area was never Rev's strong suit, but a focus on creating a lounge that, later in the evening, transitions into a club could be a winning formula. Shareable food from chef Jason Santos includes grilled tuna tacos that get a sweet kick from spicy mango salsa ($15) and sliders stuffed with braised short ribs ($3, each). There's an emphasis on hospitality, too—patrons can reserve tables via text, or ask their well-versed servers about the train schedules at nearby South Station. In a way, a downtown bar so attuned to the needs of its clientele seems almost revolutionary.

YOU SHOULDN'T HAVE

NEITHER NAUGHTY NOR nice, some gifts, however well-meaning, are just too awful to forget. Here, local chefs and restaurateurs recall some memorable misfires.

KOSTA DIAMANTOPOULAS, co-owner of All Star Sandwich Bar and the soon-to-open All Star Pizza Bar, cites a not-so-shining example presented by a customer: pizza-sauce cans decorated with doilies and rhinestones repurposed as toilet-paper holders.

Although he expressed his thanks ("It was nice of them to do it,"), he was left with a question: "I don't know what genre that falls into: senile chic?"

TODD ENGLISH says his worst gift ever "has to be a can of haggis given to me by a Scottish chef friend. The worst, but also the funniest. Or was it that can of lamb testicles?" Either way, maybe leave that one out of the donation box.

AMONG THE CHEFS and staff at UpStairs on the Square, nominees for worst gift include a Slap Chop (as seen on TV!) and a Harry & David gift basket brimming with processed cheeses. It's the thought that counts, but sometimes it's hard to know what people are thinking. "People keep giving us massages, which Deborah [Hughes] and I hate," says co-owner Mary-Catherine Deibel.

SIX YEARS LATER, time hasn't erased the memory of "a really bad set of knives from one of my sisters," says chef Nuno Alves of Dorchester's Tavolo. "They were horrible. I ditched them in a box at my mom's house."

BEST OF THE WORST, perhaps, is the snap-down dishwashing shirt presented to Ian Calhoun, co-owner of 80 Thoreau in Concord, back when he was a student at Cornell's School of Hotel Administration. A classmate thought it would be clever to personalize the shirt with the words "Sous' pal," but, explains Calhoun, "he spelled it like the Native American tribe [Sioux]. I roared with laughter." It remains unworn.

THE SHADOW OF FEAR

A memoir of bearing the unbearable

JESSICA STERN IS AN EXPERT on international terrorism at Harvard. But this book, written in a riveting, novelistic flow, is about a different kind of terror. As teenagers in Concord, Stern and her sister were raped by a man who assaulted 44 girls and later hanged himself. In a subtle, self-questioning spirit, Stern thinks through her experience, and interviews friends and another traumatized victim. She also interviews her father whose stance after the rape, for his own reasons, is stoical and distanced.

While certainly a successful "survivor," the author is surprised to discover how she shares the oddly hypnotic states that haunt other traumatized people. She gets woozy, numb and detached, sometimes maintaining puzzling boundaries. Having studied terrorists worldwide, Stern recognizes the underpinning of shame that drives some to violence, and she makes a nuanced inquiry into the dark side of violent people and their victims. Stern muses on her own sadistic fantasies about the doctor who deemed her attacker "not a sexually dangerous person." "In my mind's eye, I swing a bat right at this doctor's learned head." ✖✖✖

Denial: A Memoir of Terror
by Jessica Stern

The author is a lecturer on terrorism at Harvard.

FROM PAGE 144–145: "But the victim, too, cannot bear to believe. She may bury or dissociate from or disown her pain.... The impact of the violation drips lazily down, like that clock in Dalí's painting, pooling in the form of shame. She may remember the facts that transpired but the outline is blurry. There is a haze in the brain, and the facts are detached from feeling. Certain sounds or scents may terrify the victim, but she may not notice her fear. For me, it's that ticking sound. So irritating. I want to punch."

STATE OF GRACE

Parrot Cay combines a natural idyll with a focus on wellbeing.

RECLINE AND FALL Beachside accomodations at Parrot Cay feature plunge pools.

TO THE DEVOUT, the beatific vision means the face of God. To most human beings, though, it means sugar-white sand, lapping surf and cerulean skies, which explains why the Turks and Caicos has a thrumming tourism industry. And that's why the luxurious, New Age–inflected resort Parrot Cay is one of the islands' most paradisal destinations. It's a place of deliberate, even calculated, serenity.

JetBlue offers direct, three-and-a-half-hour-long flights from Boston to the main island of Providenciales, so you'll land in heaven in about the time it takes to drive to Albany. After weathering the grit and officiousness of customs, a van delivers Parrot Cay guests to a cottage decorated with such immaculate taste that it would send Martha Stewart into a spiritual crisis. Guests take a drink among the orchids and teak furnishings while their luggage is loaded onto a small ferry. Then it's a half-hour ride across an almost garishly aquamarine sea to the private island, the first glimpse of which is a pure, empty line of bleached sand, capped with tropical greens. No beach blankets. No people. Just the occasional pale canvas umbrella. At Parrot Cay, there's never a crowd.

The resort lacks a sense of boundary, since it covers more than 1,000 acres, but unless you rent one of the opulent private residences along the western stretch of the beach (neighbors include Bruce Willis and Christie Brinkley), facilities are within an unhurried stroll. Egrets loll around the pathways acting shiftless, but otherwise the grounds are intensely groomed, with flowers and palms

✓ Traveler's Checks

The ferry is extremely fast and bumpy. Be prepared to spill your drink if you bring one on board.

Crows in the Turks and Caicos sound like monkeys. Do not be alarmed.

Since there are no stores on the island and prices at the resort are high, consider a strategic visit to duty free on the way over if you plan on indulging any vices.

GATHER ROUND Cozy up at the poolside bar.

embellishing the scrubbier, native foliage. Paradise, it turns out, comes with energetic landscapers.

The rooms are a subdued blend of white-wash and hardwoods, and the best ones have a view of a sea so tranquil that it makes our North Atlantic look like Satan's toilet. Or you could opt for one of the beach houses, which sport private plunge pools and immediate access to an uncoiled mile of coast.

Parrot Cay takes pride in its reputation as a health destination, epitomized in its Como Shambhala Retreat, a spa and wellness facility overlooking a wildlife preserve (again with the egrets). It sports the expected panoply of yoga and pilates studios, but the real jewel is the Asian-style spa. Its peacefulness is meticulous; if you open your eyes while having your back massaged, you'll see lotus petals floating in a clay bowl underneath your face support. Afterward, there's yoga on the beach, meditation in the pavilion or a sweat in the outdoor Jacuzzi.

Even gluttony reflects Parrot Cay's attentiveness to health. The resort's two restaurants, Lotus (poolside, romantic) and Terrace (upscale, ferociously romantic), serve dishes like seared Kobe steak or roast lobster, but there's an alternate "Shambhala" menu of wholly organic dishes that leans heavily on quinoa and mild fish. It's wise to avoid the local conch—a rubbery item that lacks even the flavor of cuttlefish, and when fried is just a vehicle for batter. Better to order the snapper or sea bass, or even the burger, a mounded confection of prosciutto and Gruyère.

But eating, however pleasurable, isn't the point. The point is cool linens, an evening breeze and a view of magenta skies above the unruffled sea. The point is peace. ✖✖✖

TRANSCENDENT TRIP

A journey into the sticks shouldn't deter you from this destination.

80 Thoreau
80 Thoreau St., Concord
(978-318-0008)

THE SIMPLE THINGS IN LIFE Roast chicken offers pristine, natural flavors.

HENRY DAVID THOREAU first attracted my attention in high school. I devoured Walden, delighting in the provocative observations and aphorisms of Garrison Keillor's 19th-century precursor. Among my favorites, "Those who are 'once-and-a-half-witted' are classified with half-wits because society can only recognize a third of their wit."

My reflections on Thoreau turned to wondering what he would've made of this eatery that bears his name and sits near his beloved Walden Pond. He'd probably have dismissed it as vain, a project obstructing the Transcendentalist imperative to reduce life to its essence. That's where he and I would part ways, because to me, turning nature's bounty—especially its locally sourced bounty—into well-crafted cuisine is among the most worthwhile of human endeavors.

On top of the Concord commuter rail station, 80 Thoreau is a handsomely appointed bilevel space. With a skylit bar, gleaming mirrors and floorboards polished to a high sheen, it's a splendid stage for dinner. One evening, we began with a luscious slice of rich foie gras ($15) garnished with a pickled Concord grape puree and served with corn bread madeleines. The luxury of this dish matched the elegance of the ambience. Fluke crudo ($9), a small cut of sashimi accompanied by pickled ramps, ultra-thin radish slices and sea salt, provided a taste of simplicity, a counterpoint to the indulgence of the foie gras. On another evening, we chose the roasted squash salad ($10), which featured flavorful chunks of slightly caramelized squash together with delicate squash fritters, frisée, cranberries and pumpkin seeds for a satisfying mélange of tastes and textures.

Entrees sustained the high standards set by the appetizers. Slices of rare, succulent duck breast ($26) fanned out across the plate tasted as good as they looked. Five seared sea scallops ($25) were silky, their natural sweetness complemented by lentils, baby turnips and chanterelles. A juicy roast chicken ($21), while superb, was distinguished by garnishes of barley, kale and parsnip puree. In fact, the attention paid here to vegetables—perfunctory fillers at too many eateries—deserves special acclaim.

A heaping bowl of fresh tagliatelle ($23) featured broad velvety noodles dressed with a hearty ragout of tender, pleasantly gamey lamb shoulder and black olives. Finally, a filet of lightly breaded and pan-roasted ocean perch ($14), ordered from the "bar plates" menu, turned out to be a terrific treat, the fish enhanced by a garnish of buttery cabbage and fingerling potatoes.

Chocolate pavé

To accompany your meal, consider a bottle of 2007 Sella and Mosca Canonnau ($31), a full-bodied, Sardinian red with an elegant finish (and at a price much lower than I've seen at less upscale restaurants). For dessert, an intense chocolate pavé ($9) sated our chocolate urge.

Service was normally polished and professional, minus a Saturday visit that found us seated by the bar and apparently off the waitstaff's radar for considerable intervals. It's a shortcoming that a captain with good peripheral vision could've remedied, but despite this minor quibble, I'm convinced that this is a restaurant of true merit. For diners daunted by its distance from the city, the commuter rail offers a direct, easy answer (and no need to draw straws for a designated driver). ✖✖✖

ASK CHERYL

Q: I AM STARTING TO NOTICE BROWN AGE SPOTS ON MY FACE AND THEY MAKE ME LOOK OLD. I WANT THEM GONE: WHAT'S THE FASTEST WAY TO GET RID OF THEM?

A: Zap, zap: they're gone! IPL (Intense Pulsed Light) treatments are the way to go. In less than 30 minutes brown age spots can be safely treated with no discomfort and no downtime. The IPL treatment, also known as a Photofacial, involves a non-ablative laser that penetrates below your skin's surface to eliminate brown spots at their source. Not only does IPL remove brown spots, this treatment also gets rid of broken capillaries and redness in our skin. The result is younger looking, noticeably clearer skin.

IPL treatments can be used to remove brown age spots on the face, chest, arms and even hands!

Q: WHAT ARE FACIAL "FILLERS" AND WHAT DO THEY DO?

A: Facial fillers are a generic term for a non-surgical procedure to plump up, fill in, and re-contour the face. They immediately provide a more youthful appearance with no downtime, no anesthesia, and no surgery.

If you'd like to restore natural-looking, youthful fullness to your face, enjoy plump lips, enhance shallow contours or soften facial creases and wrinkles, dermal facial fillers may be the answer.

Although they can't help with excess sagging skin, fillers are extremely safe and can add more volume and provide immediate results at a lower cost than surgery. These treatments aren't permanent, however, and must be repeated and maintained.

Some of the brand names are Restylane, Juvederm, Perlane, and Radiesse. Each of them has unique features and specific purposes for which it is best suited. At SkinHealth, your clinician will assess your needs and recommend one or a combination of fillers to achieve your desired results.

ME, CULPA

I think I know everything, including my faults.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

I'M A KNOW-IT-ALL. A BOOR. A blowhard. But at least I know it. Or should I say, of course I know it. According to several trusted sources—colleagues, friends and relatives—I think I know everything. After considering the evidence, I'm willing to concede that they may not be entirely wrong.

Last summer, I got in an argument with my father-in-law over which way the tide was running in a river (I should mention that said father-in-law is a graduate of the United States Naval Academy). I have many fresh examples of my cavalier assertions, but that one—contradicting a Navy man on the direction of the tide—best illustrates the soaring expanse of my hubris. That's like challenging Guy Fieri on a debate about how to frost your tips or attain unwarranted popularity.

I've come to the conclusion that arguing a contentious fact is a no-win situation. If you're right, the other person ends up resenting you. If you're wrong, they think you're an idiot. The only way to come out ahead is to graciously back away.

My brother, Graham, knows this. Once, he was at a bar watching the Celtics when he mentioned that Dominique Wilkins briefly played for Boston. A guy down the bar said he was wrong and offered to put $100 on it. Now, Wilkins did play for the Celtics and Graham knew it. However, in sizing up his adversary in this debate—a gravel-voiced gentleman with a disturbingly fresh scar on his face, possibly from a knife fight—Graham wisely conceded the point. Because this guy looked like someone who might pay you your $100 and then mug you for $200 out in the parking lot.

It's fortunate that I wasn't there, because I wouldn't have been able to resist the allure of being right. I would've gleefully accepted the bet, found a photo of Wilkins in his Celtics jersey and gone home with a stab wound in my face.

I've always had a pathological need to be the guy with the answers. When I was in seventh grade, our class read Philip Booth's poem "Maine," which is about repurposing derelict cars. The poem contains the line, "If Hardscrabble Hill makes her knock, Maine rigs the water-jacket salt." During that long-ago reading, our teacher paused to ask if anyone knew what "water-jacket salt" meant. I raised my hand and explained that it was a system for keeping salt out of an engine's cylinders. Which is a completely bogus fact that I invented on the spot, and which nobody else knew enough to contradict. But I just had to be the smart guy. For all I know, that poor educator is still misinformed on the real purpose of a water jacket (to regulate the engine's temperature).

Think that's funny? Send unbiased e-mails to ezra@improper.com.

Steve Depenport

The fact that I remember being wrong about a poem in seventh grade illustrates my sick need to be right. Or, lacking that, confidently misinformed. How many times have I given directions without truly knowing where I was sending someone? More than I care to admit. I just really enjoy it when people thank me and head off toward their destination, or possibly away from it, saying, "Lucky for us we met that guy. He really knows his way around."

My know-it-all tendencies have been rammed into overdrive by the now-constant presence of my external super-brain, the iPhone. On Veteran's Day, a truck driver walked up and asked for help. He showed me a delivery slip—his shipment was bound for a business but the delivery address was for an elementary school. And since it was a holiday, the school was closed. This was definitely a case for Know-It-All Man, Banisher of Confusion and Patron Saint of Shipping.

We were right outside the school, so I called but got no answer. I called the contact number on his delivery slip, which turned out to be a wrong number. Finally, I Googled the name of the business and tried calling that. It turned out to be an auditorium remodeling company, and the guy who answered the phone informed me that the truck had a shipment of chairs for the school. But the driver was early, so there was nobody there to meet him. Mystery solved.

"Thank you, sir," said the truck driver. "You're very friendly." Well, no I'm not, actually. But does it matter whether you're altruistic, if altruism is the result? With my authority on all local matters established, my new friend had one more question. "Can I wait here?" he asked, gesturing to his 18-wheeler, which was sitting in the street taking up half a block. I didn't know the answer to that. So naturally, I said, "Sure, that's fine. There's not much traffic today, so you can park there." It sounded right. ✖✖✖

HAPPY HOLIDAYS TO YOU AND YOURS (AND THEIRS)

POINT OF VIEW
Rondo is too valuable to keep.

5 WINTER PREDICTIONS
(IN ORDER OF LIKELIHOOD)

The Patriots Will Lose in the AFC Championship So, yes, the Pats will win their first playoff game in four years. But no, they won't win a second. Who ends their season? My guess is Pittsburgh, whose trio of young athletic receivers (no, not you, Hines. Why don't you go tap dance in the corner?), will run circles around the Pats' vaunted Julian Edelman/Matt Slater–led defense.

The Bruins Will Get the No. 1 Seed It's not that I think they'll play out the rest of the season like they have in November. But it's pretty clear that they're the strongest team in the East, with the most depth, best chemistry and the top player at the game's most important position. (Man, read those two sentences again. Still feels weird!)

Tyler Seguin Will Hit the Wall It's not unheard of for a youngster to dominate the NHL (I believe Sidney Crosby was 11 when he won the MVP), but Seguin isn't quite ready. Physically, yes. Mentally? Eh, not quite. And there's no shame in that. If I were 19 and on top of the world, I'd be far less responsible than Seguin's been. But he has to mature before his takeover can begin.

Rajon Rondo Will Be Traded Not because he's not as great as he once was, but because he's better than ever. He's Boston's only legitimate asset, and Danny Ainge needs to cash in. If Rondo's been moved by the time you read this, please join me in a solemn 21-airball salute. If he's still here, make it 21-assists, and I take all the jokes back!

The Sox Will Get Hanley Ramirez I'm going to throw it out there: It's been 93 years since the Sox won a World Series without a hard-hitting head case named Ramirez in the clubhouse. Also, Hanley's available after Miami signed Jose Reyes (as well as almost every other free agent on the market). And finally, aren't there a few guys (ahem, JOSH BECKETT!) who might be worth shipping down south? Make it happen, Ben. (Sorry, I mean Larry.)

2 RANDOM THOUGHTS

ROLL THE DICE
It's easy for me to say (considering I don't live anywhere near Foxborough), but I love the idea of building a casino at Patriot Place. Seriously, how cool would that be? You know, aside from the inevitable increase of players missing time with broken kneecaps.

ZEBRA HUNTING
By now, you've seen or heard about the bogus unsportsmanlike conduct penalty that cost Cathedral High School the Division 4A Super Bowl. (If not, Google any keyword from that last sentence.) Anyway, the bottom line: The ref should be fired. Officiating like that has no place in sports... outside of the NBA.

3 HOLIDAY GIFT IDEAS

Sweet Music You've heard him bitch. You've heard him moan. But have you ever heard John Lackey... croon? It's The John Lackey Christmas Spectacular! One album, two discs of the Sox hurler's twists on your favorite holiday classics. Including the international megahit: "Rocking Around the Clubhouse Keg." Buy yours... today!

Looking for the Perfect Gift for the Pats Fan in Your Life? New from Patriots Productions, it's the Gronk doll! It runs, it catches. Drop it on its head, and it doesn't feel a thing! Pull the string and it speaks: "GRONK LIKE! GRONK WANT MONSTER SPIKE!" It's endless fun for fans of all ages. (Bibi Jones doll sold separately. Must be 21 or over.)

One and Two, and Bite and Chew Help fight off those excess holiday pounds with Big Baby Fitness. A three-part DVD that raises the veil on Glen Davis' coveted off-season workout regimen. (Note: DVDs in no way guarantee weight loss. In fact, you'll probably gain 10 pounds.)

1 ONE GRAND RETURN

It was only a matter of time before David Ortiz accepted arbitration. Now, I just pray he finds some peace. No more bitching, no more airing grievances through ESPN Deportes. Papi, your career earnings are approaching $100 million—it's not that bad. Just hit the ball and let us love you.

4 DATES TO WATCH

12/14: The Bruins are in Ottawa to take on the Senators. Careful, guys. That McCain/Kerry/Lieberman line is a real killer.

12/18: Brady vs. Tebow. The winner is... God. (And Lord, please forgive me for that awful Senators joke.)

12/19: And now we're down to only TWO months until pitchers and catchers report. Wow, time flies when you're doing absolutely nothing.

12/25: Merry Christmas! Please enjoy this heavy helping of NBA basketball. (Also: two pairs of socks, an iTunes gift card and a nap blanket from Brookstone.)

Soroff On KRISTIN BAUER VAN STRATEN

The True Blood star talks about art, cast-member crushes and people she'd bite if she were a vampire.

ACTRESS KRISTIN BAUER VAN STRATEN CAME TO FAME IN HER role as Pam, the vampire co-owner of Fangtasia nightclub on HBO's wildly popular True Blood. Born and raised in Racine, Wis., Bauer attended the School of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston until 1993, when she decided to pursue a career in acting. She made her TV debut on L.A. Law, but her first major role came when she was cast on the short-lived Fox comedy The Crew. In 1996, she appeared as "Man Hands" Gillian on Seinfeld. She's had roles on Total Security, That's Life and Hidden Hills, and she recently appeared on film in The Story of Luke. She currently stars as Maleficent in ABC's Once Upon a Time. Bauer van Straten lives in Los Angeles with her husband and two rescued dogs.

Jonathan Soroff: Do you believe vampires exist?
Kristin Bauer: In Hollywood? Energy vampires, certainly. Are you kidding me?

Would you rather be remembered for painting or acting?
Interesting question. Painting was sort of my secret sanctuary. I finally decided to tell people that I did this other thing, and I built my website. I still have a foot and a half in the acting world, so I'll still say acting. But my painting is all me.

Who'd win in a wrestling contest: you or Rutina Wesley [who plays Tara Thornton]?
Oh my God. After watching her last year, I've gotta go with Rutina.

Is it a stretch for you to play such a bitch?
No! Not at all! Interestingly, amazingly, those shoes are really easy to step into.

Weirdest fan encounter?
She was wearing a cape, and she gave me a journal that she'd been keeping. It took me, a few friends and some cocktails to figure out what she was trying to say, and I think it had something to do with her being my maker as a vampire. She also grabbed my ass. [Laughs.] Pretty memorable.

Do you really get to see Alexander Skarsgård naked?
Yes! It's a nice perk.

Who's the sexiest man on True Blood*?*
It's almost impossible for me to say at this point, because I'm so close to all these people. We're in year five of our relationships. But I do have to say that one of the set crushes for a lot of the girls is Chris Bauer [who plays Andy Bellefleur]. This is the sexiest cast. Whatever your type, he's there. But Chris Bauer is sort of the on-set heartthrob. Cute, sweet, cool. He's the guy you'd marry.

Did you think the show was going to be so huge?
I didn't. As an actor, you can only hope that you'll end up on a show like this. Watching it grow, and the fans, and the numbers, it's just amazing. I don't feel like we've reached the limit yet.

Any thoughts on Twilight*?*
I took my nieces to see it. They're 15, 16, and they're not allowed to watch True Blood yet. I thought, "Oh, perfect!" And it was.

Think this whole vampire trend is going to run its course anytime soon?
I thought it ran its course with Anne Rice. Then I thought it ran its course five years ago. And I keep seeing yet another vampire show every time I turn around. It seems to be a classic story line and archetype we keep coming back to.

If you could, would you become a vampire?
I've thought about that. It's a bit like that game "Would You Rather…" I tell myself that I'd be spiritually evolved enough to have faith in the system as it is—bodies are supposed to die. You're a spiritual being. You're not this vessel you're in. But… would I be able to turn down perpetual youth? And they're always wealthy and they always dress well. If you caught me on the wrong day, I'd say, "Oh, yeah."

Who would you feed off of?
Boy, that would be fun, because you could feed off of people you hate. You could feed off of people you thought were hot. You could feed a little too much off of some politicians or celebrities you're sick of. So, feeding off of Sarah Palin? That would be kind of awesome.

Is Anna Paquin a little pocket pal?
[Laughs.] She is small, but she's so not the personality who would be content sitting in someone's pocket. She's this fierce, incredible tour de force. She's so funny and amazing. Pocket pal doesn't really describe her.

What's the shooting schedule like?
Slightly intense. Because I'm a vampire, I'm always going to shoot at night, when it's really cold. But I've been really lucky. Fangtasia was a bar that existed in Long Beach, and they rebuilt it on the set—one advantage of being on a successful show. So I drive to a set, and I have a trailer to hang out in. The days are really long, and they'll kill you for two days, but then you have time off, because it's a huge cast with lots of plot lines.

Finish this sentence: "Vampires do it…"
Every which way.

Thing your fans would be surprised to learn about you?
They'd be surprised to see how astoundingly un-together and unfashionable I can look.

Do you have a gallery that reps your art?
I don't, and that was one of my projects on hiatus. I do a lot of commissions, so a lot of it I don't keep. But that's one of the things on my to-do list.

Your idea of a perfect Sunday afternoon?
I love when it's raining, wearing PJs, a big Sunday breakfast at home, in my slippers, no makeup. That's heaven.

What comes after True Blood*?*
There are always acting opportunities, but I've been incredibly lucky. I've gone from playing the dumb blonde to the killer vampire, and on Once Upon a Time, I'm playing a storybook character. So there will be more fun roles, and also, I've been writing. I'm working on a book, and I like to tell stories. That's why I got into acting. ✖✖✖

The Book Club

Seven of Boston's best-selling thriller writers share more than commercial success.

By Nancy Gaines

Illustrations by Molly Stone

IT WAS A DARK AND STORMY NIGHT. We knocked back whisky to quell the tremors in our quaking limbs. The air in Paradise, the rock club, not the hereafter, was redolent with the heady scent of blood, or spilled beer. We leered at each other across the loud and crowded room, milky with stage lights usually reserved for rock stars. It was coming: the mayhem, the suspense... if we didn't first crash headlong into the venue's infamous pole.

The scene had been set for the city's top thriller writers—who don't write utter tripe like the above—to meet for a night of cross-promotion and hijinks. But more about that later.

At a time when bookstores and book-books are slouching toward extinction, seven of the city's best-selling authors have sold a whopping 85 million copies—not counting e-books—between them. Make that 85 million and counting, since most of these scribes are still in their prime. Despite their staggering success, Gary Braver, Joseph Finder, Lisa Gardner, Tess Gerritsen, Chuck Hogan, William Martin and Michael Palmer aren't household names like John Grisham, yet they pen sophisticated characters and plot page-turning action, often based in our own neighborhoods. That's one uncommon denominator they share. Another is that they actually like each other.

Beloved by fans, slighted by mystery novelists, spurned by belleletrists ("They're backbiters," sniffed one author), these seven hugely commercial writers have made Boston the hub of their universe. They form a virtual salon where they share gripes, sources, cheer and counsel. In this under-the-radar book club, they kvell and cavil easily with one another because they speak the same language, and swap notes by e-mail and at bars, restaurants, seminars, fund-raisers and one another's homes.

"Famous to some, infamous to others, unknown to the rest," is how Martin, author of Back Bay and eight other self-styled "historical thrillers," sums up the group. Adds Gardner, author of 30 novels that have sold some 20 million copies, "We're a collegial bunch. We value time with kindred spirits because the rest of the time we're a focus group of one."

Explains Gerritsen, a Stanford-educated physician who's authored 23 books that have sold 25 million copies, including the Boston-based Rizzoli & Isles series (now a hit cable-TV show): "We write very scary books, but we really play well with others." She's been friends for years with Gary Braver, who sold about a million copies of his series of eight biotech thrillers. And they're all pals with Martin, who they often meet at Grafton Street in Cambridge, which has a cameo in Braver's latest book, Tunnel Vision. "It's a fellowship that's grown out of conferences," says Martin, who's finishing his 10th novel. "I just had lunch with Joe [Finder] the other day at Stephanie's. We talked about works in progress and sourcing."

Another connection: Martin and Finder, who's cornered the private-spy niche, are close friends with Palmer, who pens popular medical-political novels (his Extreme Measures became a film with Hugh Grant and Gene Hackman). Like Gerritsen, he's a physician-turned-multimillion-selling author. Together, the two docs cohost seminars for physicians aspiring to write thrillers in their spare time. "There's no question we cheer each other on," says Palmer. When he organized a fund-raiser at the Paradise Rock Club to benefit post-traumatic stress syndrome, it drew pretty much the whole gang.

"Mysteries are whodunits, and thrillers are driven by dread. Mysteries were considered more 'literate,' and we were dismissed as gore and sensationalism."

The event included a book signing. "So we'd talk and drink and then shout at each other from the signing tables," recalls Finder. "I'd sign books saying, 'I'm Michael Palmer,' and we'd pose with each others' fans."

This brainy bunch—apart from the two physicians, there are three Ivy Leaguers, plus a PhD—also hangs out at ThrillerFest, an annual promotional event in New York where they "go to dinner at the Grand Central Oyster Bar, or hang out at the bar at the Grand Hyatt until two or three in the morning," says Finder, who's frequently the ringleader.

He adds, "The conceit is that we're all viciously competitive, but in reality, it's not that way."

Adds Palmer, "There's definitely a special connection among Boston writers. And as others move in, we connect even more."

The new kid on the block is Chuck Hogan, whose 2004 heist thriller, Prince of Thieves, was a big hit that got even bigger after Ben Affleck directed his adaptation, The Town. Hogan has published eight books, and is currently working on a vampire trilogy (with director Guillermo del Toro). Finder introduced him to the rest of the group. "There's definitely a shorthand among us," he notes.

The authors share a bond in that they're lumped under the label of "thriller writers." "We were tired of being marginalized at mystery writers' conferences and by awards," recalls Braver, who teaches writing at Northeastern under his given name, Gary Goshgarian. "Mysteries are whodunits, and thrillers are driven by dread. Mysteries were considered more 'literate,' and we were dismissed as gore and sensationalism. So we got close as friends, and in 2004, as the International Thriller Writers, we became an entity unto ourselves. Now we're a big deal. There are more thrillers on the best-seller list than mysteries."

Within the thriller genre, these writers have their specialties: spycraft (Finder), police procedure (Gardner), violent crime (Gerritsen), science (Braver), conspiracy (Palmer), history (Martin) and picaresque (Hogan). Of course, there's sex and gore aplenty in many of these books, a topic the group often discusses.

"We're suspense novelists but we're also parents and children," says Gardner, whose grandmother underlines, in red ink, every offensive passage in her manuscripts. "We talk about how and when our kids, or grandkids, can read our books. We commiserate about having to talk about the sex and violence when your parents are in the audience."

They also turn to each other for expert advice. Gardner goes to Finder for guidance on Massachusetts guns laws and ballistics, one of his fortes. Braver calls on Gerritsen and Palmer for, natch, medical information.

When Martin gets together with the group, a prime topic, he says, is "the faster spin of the hamster wheel: the increasing pressure from New York, from corporate, to speed up output." Best-selling authors are now being asked to produce a book a year. "I move like a glacier," admits Martin. "But I've lasted longer than just about anybody at this point." When he gets frustrated by the demands of commercialism, he turns to his fellow writers. As Martin tells it, Palmer likes to remind him, "You're writing books people will remember. And I say, 'But your sales top mine.'" Even so, Martin adds, "It's always more fun to be going through a challenging week with a friend."

If there's any ribbing among these comrades-in-pens, it's of the "collegial complaint" ilk, says Braver. This can, indeed, turn bitchy. "If you were a fly on the wall, what you might hear us grouse about is another author's work and why the hell it became an international best seller," Gerritsen wrote in an e-mail from Istanbul, Turkey, where she was researching a new book. "And I won't name names!"

Whereas the petite and gracious Gerritsen runs contrary to character as probably the most violent and gory of the writers, Finder, a Russian scholar (summa cum laude from Yale, recruited by the CIA), is "perhaps the lead player in the corporate thriller genre," according to The New York Times Book Review. With about 15 million books in print, including High Crimes (turned into a movie starring Morgan Freeman and Ashley Judd), Finder (pronounced like fin, not fine) set his 11th and latest, Buried Secrets, in Boston. It features a U.S. senator who lives in Louisburg Square. "I never met John Kerry," he says, "but a mutual friend sent him a copy of the book."

There are other writers on the periphery of the core, like Dennis Lehane, whom Finder recently dined with at No. 9 Park. It's a playful dynamic. "Dennis told this perfect story at the Boston Book Festival about some guy shouting at him in Charlestown," says Finder. "And I e-mailed him after, saying, 'Great story, even though it's not true.' He sent back, 'F you. Of course it's true.'"

> "My husband doesn't want to hear about decomposing remains."

Of course, there's nothing like professional interest to keep a friendship alive. Says Gardner, "Who else am I going to talk to about visiting the Body Farm?" the notorious University of Tennessee research site used to teach crime-scene skills. "My husband doesn't want to hear about decomposing remains."

Gerritsen values shoptalk with Palmer, her partner in writing seminars. "We've debated the pros of planning versus plunging when it comes to writing (he's a planner and I'm a plunger)," she says, referring to the outlining process. "Mostly, though, what we do in private is whine about how hard this is! How much we sweat and fret over whether we've got a disaster in the works. Whether we know what we're doing. Whether anyone will read this turkey."

That's the real benefit of having such a close, connected network, says Palmer. "You realize everybody is fighting the same battle, even though you feel like you're fighting it alone. It's lonely there. But it beats real work." ×××

APOCALYPSE, SOON

THE MAYAN CALENDAR PREDICTS IMMINENT DOOM. HERE'S A PERSONAL BUCKET LIST.

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

LIKE LATTER-DAY Chicken Littles, people have been squawking about it for years: With the ancient Mayan calendar ending in 2012, the world will soon come crashing down around us. So while this is definitely our year-end issue, it might also be our End of Days issue.

Certainly, there are signs of an impending apocalypse everywhere you look: Natural disasters. War. A Bieber Christmas album. And who am I to gainsay the wisdom of a culture smart enough to disappear before millions of college kids turned their pristine coastline into a Spring Break vomitorium? Maybe, all this time, we should've been listening to that so-called crazy guy in Boston Common.

But there's good news. This year, there's no point in making the same old lose weight/quit smoking/save money New Year's resolutions. Even better, there's no reason to care about how the Patriots are doing, or whether the Red Sox are going to choke. Assuming the ancient Mesoamericans got it right, we have less than a year to live.

So I've compiled a cosmic bucket list of things to do before the world implodes and the cockroaches take over, or however this Armageddon thing is going to play out. (Personally, I'm betting it starts with the discovery of a sex tape starring Pippa Middleton and Barney Frank.) Technically, we're supposed to have until Dec. 21. Still, there's no time like the present to get started. Those cake pops aren't going to eat themselves.

It seems sensible to do things in an orderly fashion, so I'll lay it out for you chronologically.

First, you should go see the A Day in Pompeii exhibit at the Museum of Science, which might not be as titillating as the ancient pornographic pots and pans at the Museum of Fine Arts, but does give a vivid glimpse of the results of a surprise volcano.

Another thing you should plan for, if only to free up some time: If civilization is ending, there's no reason to keep working out. Most major religions say nothing about flabby abs being a handicap in the hereafter. Quit your gym membership and spend the money on a vice you've always wanted to try. You could take up drinking, or drugs, or hanging out in Provincetown. The important thing is that this will automatically take care of assignment number two, which is losing your job.

You won't need much income once cracks the size of the Grand Canyon start opening in Earth's crust and most of Boston reverts to scenic wetland. So this is probably a propitious time to post those naughty pictures of your boss at the office holiday party on Facebook. Or, better, post even naughtier ones of yourself, even if you have to hire six contortionists and a goat. Regardless of how you accomplish becoming unemployed, you're still going to be busy.

If you haven't already, max out your credit cards. Treat yourself to all the stuff you can't afford on a Newbury Street shopping spree. Most of the high-end retailers will probably be overrun by zombies by then. (After all, when aren't they?)

The next item on the agenda is to befriend and socialize with someone who works for the cable company. When making plans, tell them that you'll meet at a specific restaurant or bar within a not-terribly-convenient four-to-six-hour window of time. Arrive with only 10 minutes to spare, and if they're not there, charge them for a service call. This will be one of your primary sources of income until doomsday. Other money-making schemes: Peel the gold off the State House dome and sell it to that 1-800 number on TV; enter banks just before closing time and refuse to leave without collecting a $5 "processing fee."

April Fools' Day presents unique opportunities. Any Bostonian worth his beans knows the old rhyme about the color of the light on top of the old John Hancock building:

Steady blue, clear view.
Flashing blue, clouds due.
Steady red, rain ahead.
Flashing red, snow instead.

According to local lore, before it was used to mark the end of the Curse of the Bambino, alternating red and blue means "imminent thermonuclear war." Not as good a rhyme, perhaps, but making it happen would be a nifty prank.

All this acting-out, if done flamboyantly, will make you an object of media attention. Everyone deserves to be famous for at least 15 minutes, which is easy, but you want to be remembered for doing something that betters the human condition. So post a YouTube video of yourself dancing to a Katy Perry song. That'll impress everyone.

Because melanoma will no longer be a concern, you should spend as much time as possible at the beach this summer (unless, of course, the oceans have already started to boil, which will at least resolve the old controversy of how to properly cook a lobster). Getting to the Cape, Islands, Newport, Maine or the Hamptons will be more nightmarish than ever, but the trade-off will be worth it. Scientists (even the ones at Harvard and MIT) say that in 2012, the sun will be approaching "solar maximum," the peak of its 11-year cycle, and we can expect some out-of-the-ordinary activity. This has been interpreted in some end-of-the-world scenarios as the likely culprit—a giant solar flare that will destroy the Earth. Take full advantage. Slather yourself in baby oil, use one of those tinfoil reflectors from the '70s and enter the George Hamilton Invitational Bronze-Off.

For those of you who prefer to vacation in the Berkshires, Adirondacks or the White or Green Mountains, keep in mind that the ozone layer will probably no longer exist, and at higher altitudes, you may resemble a disintegrating vampire after prolonged exposure to the sun. For those who choose to stay in Boston, this is finally your chance to tell the tourists in Faneuil Hall to walk faster and stop gaping at every cobblestone. Nude sunbathing along the Esplanade will likely escape the attention of police, who'll be too busy with riots, looting and locating an air-conditioned Dunkin' Donuts.

IF THE OCEANS START TO BOIL, AT LEAST THAT'LL RESOLVE THE OLD CONTROVERSY ABOUT HOW TO PROPERLY COOK A LOBSTER.

If we make it to autumn, the foundations of civilization should be crumbling. This would be the time to gather all of your smug friends who ever ran the Boston Marathon and tally up exactly how much time they wasted training for it. This should also be done to anyone you know who compiled a bucket list without the impending apocalypse in mind. Your friend finally read Moby-Dick? Tell her the movie with Gregory Peck was better. Your aunt went for a ride in a hot-air balloon? Point out that she did nothing more than float at 5,000 feet in a picnic basket. Make them wallow in their underachievement.

A major bonus of surviving through October: You'll never have to hear the term "leaf peeping" again. Also, within a matter of weeks, the Prudential Center and Boston City Hall will no longer disgrace the name of architecture.

The first Tuesday in November will present all adult citizens with one last thrill—voting for a president who, given the circumstances, has a perfectly reasonable excuse for being totally ineffectual. If this turns out to be former governor Mitt Romney, rest assured that the end of the world won't muss a hair on his head. But whichever candidate wins (I'm planning to cast a write-in vote for Chester A. Arthur), at least he'll make good use of the Situation Room to watch stuff like Cambridge colliding with Cuba, or the asteroid hurtling directly toward your house.

Now is also the time to start driving 120 miles per hour on the Mass. Pike, and when the state troopers pull you over, say, "I know exactly how fast I was going. And do you have any idea how funny you look in those jodhpurs?"

By early December, you may be getting antsy and tempted to call NASA to see if the space shuttle's still grounded. (Nothing would cap a year of bad behavior like a last-second getaway.) You may even find difficulty getting into the holiday spirit, and it's perfectly understandable if you don't buy gifts, since you won't have time to return anything to Macy's. You might, by the same token, want to be extra nice to your Jewish friends, because Hanukkah falls on Dec. 8–16, and it may be your last chance to open a present.

But above all, you must live every day of 2012 as if it could be your last, whether that means praying fervently or partying like it's 1999. That's good advice, even if the Mayans are full of it. ✖✖✖

MAKING AN IMPRESSION

THEY MAY LOOK A BIT barbershop, but their hearts are pure rock 'n' roll. The plaid-tastic Mighty Mighty Bosstones have finished tooting their horns on a European tour and are back in their rightful place, in front of a native crowd. Revving up the skacore sounds, the boys bring their annual Hometown Throwdown spectacular back to the House of Blues from Dec. 28–30. With the recent release of their ninth album, The Magic of Youth, frontman Dicky Barrett is once again in fine, raspy fettle. Where'd you go? Well, now they're back.

CASEY RACKHAM

Hometown Throwdown runs Dec. 28–30, $25–$35 per night, at House of Blues, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (888-693-2583) houseofblues.com

Capsules by Sean Burns

The Artist ★★★ This delightful bauble from French director Michel Hazanavicius leaps back in history and dares audiences to sit through a black-and-white silent picture. It almost succeeds. Shot at 22 frames per second and using that boxy 1.37 aspect ratio, The Artist resurrects silent movie conventions, complete with title cards, piano music and barn-door-broad performances. Beginning in 1927, the less-than-original story line mashes A Star Is Born with Singin' in the Rain and features Jean Dujardin as a matinee idol rendered irrelevant by the invention of sound. His chorus-girl crush (Bérénice Bejo) becomes a superstar just as his career begins to collapse, and between the sparkling opening and crowd-pleasing close, The Artist dawdles for a bit too long in its maudlin midsection. (It's a 100-minute movie that would've played like gangbusters at 80.) Already being overrated by awards groups, it's a fun stunt of a picture that leaves a smile on your face. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

A Dangerous Method ★★★ Master of intellectual perversity David Cronenberg sets his sights on the early days of psychoanalysis in this whipsmart adaptation of Christopher Hampton's play, The Talking Cure. Michael Fassbender, this year's MVP of onscreen sex, stars as a repressed Carl Jung in danger of losing his sense of propriety thanks to a hysterical patient (Keira Knightley) with a hankering for spankings. Viggo Mortensen delivers a wonderfully droll performance as Sigmund Freud, basking in self-satisfaction and constantly smoking a cigar that presumably represents something more. Knightley's go-for-broke performance has wrongly been criticized as scenery chewing as it's crucial to the film's design of female sexuality as an uncontrollable force. Unfortunately the energy flags in later reels. In lieu of an ending, it just drifts away. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Descendants ★★★ Despite never quite buying him as a cuckold, I enjoyed George Clooney's rumpled everyman turn in Alexander Payne's latest feature, adapted from Kaui Hart Hemmings' 2007 novel. When his cheating wife is critically injured in a boating accident during the opening credits, Clooney needs to step up and take charge of his family for the first time. The Descendants' plotless middle hour is particularly fantastic. Shailene Woodley's coltish awkwardness plays to the hesitation present in Clooney's relationship with his teen daughters, and Payne has a knack for letting scenes breathe and allowing his characters to surprise us. The central action in this very funny and often quite sad movie is Clooney stepping back and reevaluating everything and everybody he once took for granted. It feels like a transitional film for Payne, who has lost his young-man pitilessness and here reaches for a more accepting tone. It grows on you. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Hugo ★★★★ Leave it to Martin Scorsese to direct a children's adventure about the importance of film preservation. Working from Brian Selznick's book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, this miracle of a movie follows the title orphan (Asa Butterfield) as he hides out in a Parisian train station in the 1930s, winding the clocks and dodging a pratfall-riddled rent-a-cop (Sacha Baron Cohen). Meanwhile, a grumpy shopkeeper (Ben Kingsley) just might have a secret of his own. Hugo takes a sharp turn into a voluptuously helmed cinema history lesson that should be taught in schools. Scorsese employs cutting-edge digital 3-D technologies for this love letter to forgotten films, embracing the exploratory spirit of the medium's original pioneers. Hugo reminded me why I fell in love with movies in the first place. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Ides of March ★★★ Adapted by George Clooney, Grant Heslov and Beau Willimon from Willimon's off-Broadway play, The Ides of March stars Ryan Gosling as a suave Washington, D.C., up-and-comer working on a hotly contested primary campaign for Clooney's too-good-to-be-true contender. Solid, if a little stuffy, the film works best when it sticks with the day-to-day grind of a life in politics: stump speeches, poll numbers, TV spots and the right way to spin a story. Playing the Democratic wet dream of a candidate, Clooney can't resist laying out his own personal talking points on a variety of current issues. (I'd probably vote for him.) So why is this finely crafted, well-acted movie almost impossible to get excited about? For starters, the idea of corruption in politics is no great shakes. But I also think Clooney's clipped professionalism behind the camera might be to blame. The scene work

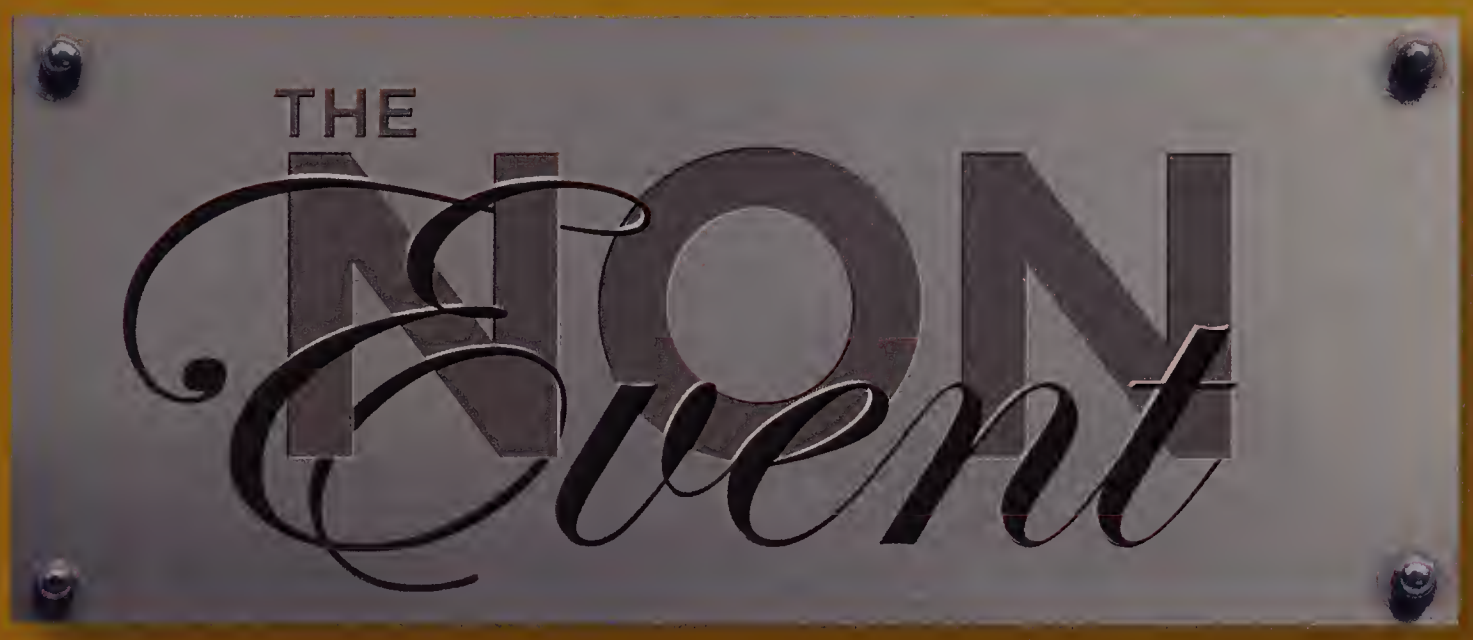
Diablo Cody's angsty dialogue rings immature.

Young Adult ★
Starring Charlize Theron, Patton Oswalt, Patrick Wilson, Elizabeth Reaser and Collette Wolfe. Written by Diablo Cody. Directed by Jason Reitman. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.



IN ORDER TO REVIEW a movie, it helps if you're able to see what's happening onscreen.

Try telling that to the crack team at the Regal Fenway, who recently projected Young Adult for critics and recruited audience members through a 3-D filter, again. Over the past year and a half, such appalling presentation has become par for the course in both of Boston's massive multiplexes. As with a Tower Heist screening in the same auditorium several weeks earlier, Young Adult flickered onscreen with the murky, desaturated dinge of dirty dishwater.

Being a bit of a projection-booth rat, I excused myself during the opening credits and informed a manager at the customer-service desk not only what the problem was, but exactly how to fix it. Unfortunately, the picture remained dim and mired in shadows for the rest of its running time. Some people tell me I have no right to is tight, concise and fully functional. Lean and no-nonsense, even during the more lurid second half, it ultimately feels smaller than it should. (At Boston Common, Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

J. Edgar ★ ½ The worst thing about having heroes is that they always let you down. In many ways, J. Edgar Hoover is the classic Clint Eastwood character we've been watching since before Dirty Harry—a principled fellow who lets his workaholic tendencies and private codes destroy his personal life, until moral gray areas blur into darkness. Except this film feels like a school play. Swathed in horrible old-age makeup for the majority of J. Edgar's running time, Leonardo DiCaprio rants and raves to a collection of biographers, providing lazy narration where none is required. This closeted, ham-fisted Hoover is a chore to spend time with (as his real life counterpart probably was), and I endured most of J. Edgar just wishing to get away from him. There's no outside perspective, no relief from his drama queen shenanigans. It's a deeply silly movie; American history as kitsch, played out like a drag show. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jack and Jill NO STARS Isn't this exactly the kind of movie Adam Sandler was ragging on in Funny People? Apparently there's nothing more amusing than a comedian in a fat suit and a dress, but Sandler's venture into Big Momma's House territory is appalling, even by the half-assed standards of Happy Madison productions. Horribly directed by Dennis Dugan, Jack and Jill finds Sandler starring as both a successful commercial director and his bovine twin sister, a woman who leaves sweat stains on the bed when she sleeps and speaks in a grating sketch-comedy voice. Somewhere in the midst of all this arrives Al Pacino, playing himself as a lonely horndog with the hots for Sandler in drag. Hoo-ha-ing his way into grotesque self-parody, Pacino must've gotten jealous when he saw Bobby DeNiro's Fockers paychecks. The movie stops dead in its tracks so Michael Corleone can rap a commercial for Dunkin' Donuts. It's the worst Adam Sandler picture yet, and that's saying something. (At Boston Common, Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

Like Crazy ★ There's an oft-quoted axiom I wish more young writers would heed: Just because it happened to you, doesn't make it interesting. Director Drake Doremus' semi-autobiographical tale of young lovers torn apart by immigration laws is as excruciating to sit through as anything I've seen this year. Anton Yelchin and Felicity Jones star as two dull college kids who fall in love during a bunch of montages and never come up with anything to say to each other. He designs furniture and has a thing about chairs. She's British. There endeth the character development. She stupidly overstays her visa, and then is shocked to find that this presents a problem when she attempts to return. Instead of doing anything sensible like allowing her rich family to intervene, the two instead mope on separate continents, texting each other while listening to sad music. The shockingly poor digital photography looks like it was shot on a 15-year-old camcorder, and I can't for the life of me figure out how this got released. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

complain, since I get into these things for free. But this problem obviously isn't getting fixed anytime soon, and you're the ones paying $11.50 for crap treatment. I only stuck around because it was already apparent that, even had it been projected with any semblance of professionalism, Young Adult would still be one of the most miserable movie-going experiences of the year.

Written by Diablo Cody, the ubiquitous and weirdly thin-skinned professional celebrity who won an Oscar for coining Juno's obnoxious catchphrases, Young Adult feels like it was made strictly to settle some old scores. Charlize Theron stars as Mavis Gary, a drunken divorcée finding any excuse she can to put off ghostwriting the final installment in a canceled series of tween novels. Wildly misinterpreting an e-mailed birth announcement from her high-school flame Buddy Slade (Patrick Wilson), Mavis heads back to her hometown of Mercury, Minn., to break up his marriage.

Into this vast wasteland of chain restaurants and obese Wal-Mart shoppers arrives Theron's big-city goddess, dripping with contempt for these misshapen folk who have no fashion sense. Predictably, her mission to rescue Buddy from his perfectly happy family doesn't quite go as planned, and in between failed sexual advances and embarrassing public outbursts, she spends a series of long evenings getting hammered with Matt Freehauf, a fat kid she ignored in high school.

Even had it been projected with any semblance of professionalism, Young Adult would still be one of the most miserable movie-going experiences of the year.

Played by the brilliant comedian Patton Oswalt, Matt is an oasis of decency and common sense in a screenplay sorely lacking both. If you leave aside a handicap explained by a glib bit of backstory, he's basically just being Patton Oswalt, puncturing Mavis' delusions and making obscure Star Wars references. Oswalt happens to be one of Hollywood's most celebrated script-doctors, and a lot of his dialogue sounds like his notes on the terrible movie he's trapped inside.

Young Adult is at least remarkable for the way that it espouses two seemingly contradictory worldviews. On one hand, the film is a mean-spirited revenge fantasy, in which the girl who was prettier and more popular than you in high school returns home from the big city as a shrew who hates you for being happy. Director Jason Reitman wallows in agonizingly long scenes of Mavis' public humiliation, while Theron's grating performance asks for no audience empathy whatsoever.

At the same time, we must suffer the movie's septic condescension toward small-town life. Cody even goes so far as to supply a climactic monologue for Matt's wallflower sister (Collette Wolfe), itemizing the aesthetic deficiencies of Mercury's denizens and rallying Mavis for yet another assertion of her superiority.

I was reminded throughout of Greenberg, Noah Baumbach's scathing 2010 portrait of a similarly dyspeptic loner staring down middle age. But where Baumbach sought to explore and illuminate the lives of these unhappy people wrestling with their choices, Cody and Reitman seem much more interested in scoring points off their characters and making cheap jokes at the expense of anybody who isn't lucky enough to be Diablo Cody or Jason Reitman.

Ironic that the Regal Fenway's 3-D filter wasn't nearly the biggest barrier between the audience and these characters. Reitman and Cody's smug contempt keeps them further away from us than any of Boston cinemas' technical blunders. ✖✖✖ director Sean Durkin's astonishing debut is all about a loss of identity and the slippery slope between the past and the present. It's impossible to know what in this film is just a dream, or, more likely, a nightmare. Played by Elizabeth Olsen (yes, kid sister to those odious twins), Martha is first glimpsed fleeing from a cult compound deep in the deceptively soothing woods of the Catskills. She makes a panicked phone call to her estranged sister Lucy (Sarah Paulson), but right away we can tell that something isn't right. In the style of vintage Polanski, Durkin's confident film uses long takes and tension within compositions to conjure a consuming sense of unease. There's something off about the camera angles and the space between these characters. We're left stranded between identities, trapped in the tragic limbo of a doomed girl with too many names and no idea what any of them stand for. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Melancholia ★★★★ There's a massive planet on a collision course with Earth, but knowing writer/director Lars Von Trier, we're probably more interested in its metaphorical implications. Kirsten Dunst stars as the less-interesting bipolar sister born into a family of privilege, rapid-cycling her way through one of the worst weddings ever captured on film. Granted, she never had a chance to begin with, as her mom (Charlotte Rampling) is going quietly nuts in the guest bedroom while papa (John Hurt) wrestles around with double dates. Family and friends self-destruct in blackly comic fashion throughout the shenanigans, and Dunst's Justine becomes a punishing sociopath. Full disclosure: I spent the better (and worst) parts of last year in a relationship with somebody I loved who suffered from a similar disorder. Melancholia scorched me to my core and left me unable to speak for an hour afterwards. Has there ever been a better metaphor for depression than a gigantic dark planet bearing down on you from the cosmos? (At Kendall Square.)

The Muppets ★★★ ½ Gloriously retro from start to finish, this proudly 2-D movie eschews computer animation in favor of felt puppets and embraces the vaudeville ethos of Jim Henson's original TV program, in which silliness and sweetness go hand in hand. Credit writer/costar Jason Segel, a Judd Apatow mainstay who cashed in his clout from the raunchy hit Forgetting Sarah Marshall for a chance to bring his old heroes back to the big screen. It's a classic "getting the band back together" routine combined with a "Hey, let's put on a show!" narrative that reintroduces our beloved characters in witty and surprising ways. Segel and company get the effervescent spirit so right it's easy to forgive a few trivial missteps. For starters, there's a bit too much to-do over the film's human love story, which bogs down the otherwise bouncy proceedings. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

My Week With Marilyn ★★ Simon Curtis' adaptation of Colin Clark's suspect memoir is a great big slab of fan-fiction—a film that follows the template of 2008's Me and Orson Welles as a banal wish-fulfillment fantasy for movie buffs. Charmless Eddie Redmayne plays Clark, an idealist with silver-screen dreams, working a thankless job on Sir Laurence Olivier's The Prince and the Showgirl. Olivier, played with what looks like a prosthetic chin by Kenneth Branagh, cast American bombshell Marilyn Monroe as his costar, assuming he'd get to sleep with her. Michelle Williams, an actress apparently incapable of giving a bad performance, is the picture's lone saving grace. The Monroe va-va-voom is very clearly just another one of Norma Jean's costume changes, and the real pleasure of Williams' work is watching her flip her sex-kitten routine on and off like a light switch. One can't help wondering what a serious movie about Marilyn Monroe might've been like with the fearless Williams in the role, but this is little more than the masturbatory fancies of Redmayne's nonentity. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Shame ★★★★ Director Steve McQueen (no, not that one) follows up Hunger, his despairing Bobby Sands biopic, with an unsettling depiction of sex addiction in Manhattan. Michael Fassbender delivers the year's most fearless performance as Brandon, a successful yuppie who buries himself in an oblivion of empty hookups, seedy clubs, prostitutes and porn. When Brandon's train-wreck of a sister (Carey Mulligan) arrives needing a place to crash, their frayed family dynamic ruptures Brandon's self-imposed isolation. Short on dialogue and shot in minutes-long takes that leave the performers nowhere to hide, Shame is an exposed nerve. McQueen's vision of New York City is steely and unforgiving, all reflective surfaces and anonymity. Mulligan, too often confined to playing a kitten, is a revelation here, aching with carnal need. Look past all the sex and this is a horror movie about the loneliness and alienation imposed by modern life. (At Kendall Square.)

The Skin I Live In ★★ ½ After floundering in recent years with sentimental Oscar bait, Pedro Almodóvar's cheerful return to perversity reunites him with his 1990s muse, Antonio Banderas. Here Banderas delivers a shocker of a performance as a vindictive plastic surgeon haunted by a laundry list of past tragedies that pile up in a telenovela

Origin Story

Family Roots When The Tree of Life was released earlier this year, it collected a bevy of stellar reviews, particularly for Sean Penn and director Terrence Malick. It's been out of theaters for a few months, but the artsy flick about a man in the 1950s whose life parallels the creation of the cosmos comes back to the big screen at the Brattle Theatre Dec. 21–23. If you're eager for Oscar season, make sure to catch the visual stunner in all its projected glory, as early buzz pegged this one to take top honors.

fashion. Ingeniously employing a flashback structure that eliminates any possible critique without giving away the movie's most shocking secrets, it's only safe to reveal that Banderas' surgeon has been perfecting genetically engineered replacement skin with an unwilling human guinea pig locked in his elaborate home laboratory. There's some audacious messing with gender roles, and as usual, Almodóvar reels in a metric ton of winking classic film references, calling out everything from Franju's Eyes Without a Face to Hitchcock's Vertigo. The problem is the leaden pacing. Material this outré demands a dizzy, headlong pace, yet the director remains curiously detached and slowpokey. Twenty minutes tighter and this might've been something amazing. (At Kendall Square.)

Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy ★★ Let the Right One In director Tomas Alfredson's stagnant adaptation of John le Carré's spy novel revels in the source material's status as the anti-Bond thriller. Set in a 1973 rife with bad sideburns and unflattering eyeglasses, it's espionage full of ugly men toting manila folders and making insinuations in rooms so smoky that even the movie theater winds up with nicotine stains on its walls. Something very bad happened in Budapest, and Gary Oldman's George Smiley is eventually coaxed from retirement to ferret out a mole within the British secret service. Chockablock with great English character actors aching for a paycheck now that the Harry Potter series is over, Tinker Tailor fusses with a fractured time line, obscuring crucial information and priding itself on keeping the audience as far away from the plot as possible. This is an expertly mounted, enervating slog. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Tower Heist ★★ Brett Ratner's pandering Ocean's 11 knockoff stars Ben Stiller as a "working class" building manager for a luxury midtown Manhattan complex. Alan Alda plays a slimy, wannabe Bernie Madoff who has made off with the staff's pension funds in a Ponzi scheme. The only exciting thing about Tower Heist is that Eddie Murphy—playing a boyhood reprobate pal of Stiller's—actually seems to be trying again. (It's been a rough decade or two for us fans.) In full-on Billy Ray Valentine mode, Murphy lends these lugubrious proceedings a shot in the arm, constantly hinting at a filthier movie happening somewhere just outside the frame. Stiller's notorious ego is well represented, hogging most of the running time with his put-upon Queens drawl (he sounds like a parody of blue-collar Boston, dropping R's left and right). Brett Ratner continues to be the most anonymous filmmaker working today, with every cut and music cue arriving exactly where expected. Such a shame Murphy finally came back to play for such hackwork. (In the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn—Part One ★ Wait, what just happened? Sadly lacking the wherewithal to slog my way through Stephenie Meyer's subliterate phenomenon, this reviewer was unprepared for the gonzo plot turns of the series' final chapter, which has been cravenly split into two films for reasons of commercial calculation and severe artistic demerit. Having spent the past three movies begging to get banged by her sparkly vampire boyfriend, Edward (Robert Pattinson, acting with his hair again), Kristen Stewart's 18-year-old Bella is finally deflowered and impregnated in a thunderous anticlimax. I can't even begin to parse all the creepy anti-sex, body-horror, abortion debate issues bubbling around the ugly subtext, as I was too distracted by the gang of wolves having a psychic strategy discussion just outside the birth chamber. It looked like an outtake from Up. (I may or may not have shouted "Squirrel!" in a crowded theater.) And all that was before the toothy vampire episiotomy. Then a werewolf falls in love with a baby. People really read this garbage? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Music { PAUL ROBICHEAU }

TURN IT UP TO '11

'Tis the season for my top releases of the year.

Tom Waits Bad as Me America's eccentric genius molds his raspy voice to scrapyard rock 'n' blues and tender balladry. The result: His first new set in seven years is sublime. String-cracking top cats like Keith Richards, Marc Ribot and Flea need only revel in support of Waits' warped sensibility.

Adele 21 Heartache sells, and Grammy darling Adele pitches it best with her brassy, aching voice. She amps up her sassy soul belting, transcending mainstream production distractions, while confirming she also can nail a piano ballad.

Wilco The Whole Love Singer/songwriter Jeff Tweedy and his seasoned ensemble take flight on their own record label. From its opening art-thrash mashup to contemplative folk-pop and an arc of Beatles-esque notes in between, this is Wilco's most expansive effort in a decade.

PJ Harvey Let England Shake Musically haunting and poetically graphic, this return to form draws its power from Harvey's sober ruminations on war and nationalism. Her voice hovers over folky, shimmering rock that's as much autoharp and sax as guitar. It's miles from her early punk-blues machinations, yet her writing has never been sharper.

Ry Cooder Pull Up Some Dust and Sit Down A guitar ace who played with the Rolling Stones and produced the world-music smash Buena Vista Social Club, Cooder hits another highpoint inspired by today's socio-economic lows. From deft blues to Tex-Mex, he defends the working man and derides corrupt bankers and politicians. It can't get more barbed than the antiwar "Christmas Time This Year," which speaks of amputees over an accordion-spiced polka.

St. Vincent Strange Mercy Indie-rocker Annie Clark builds spooky grooves and stark, synthetic textures on her sophisticated third outing. But beyond her incisive guitar, Clark's coolly luxuriant voice, at times nervous and unnerving, seals an ominous mood. As a transitional album following previous laptop-made efforts, it whets the appetite for Clark's next move.

The Roots Undun While known for their dramatically different gig as Jimmy Fallon's Late Night house band, these Philly hip-hop veterans have dropped a masterpiece.

Gleeful abandon lifts Wild Flag to the rank of indie-rock's flagship female supergroup.

A fictitious drug hustler's life story told in reverse, it's driven by Tariq "Black Thought" Trotter's gruff, bleak rhymes over twinkling keyboards and taut R&B beats. Guests include Big K.R.I.T. and Dice Raw, who raps, "You either done doing crime now or you done in." The album is capped by a palate-cleansing suite that's spanned by Sufjan Stevens' somber piano, a free-jazz blast and a string quartet.

The Low Anthem Smart Flesh These indie-folk adventurers found ghostly ambience in the vacant Rhode Island pasta-sauce plant where they cut the bulk of this gem. It was the perfect setting for their arsenal of antique drums and organs, hammered dulcimers, horns and musical saws. Despite the quirky instrumentation, the heart of the record belongs to Ben Knox Miller's timeless, languid songs of hushed wonder.

Wild Flag Wild Flag Gleeful abandon lifts Wild Flag, which includes former members of Sleater-Kinney and Helium, to the rank of indie-rock's flagship female supergroup. Their catchy tunes reflect Patti Smith–style spunk, girl-group harmony, New Wave groove and garage psychedelia. It's the sound of friends having a ball.

Danger Mouse & Daniele Luppi Rome Collaboration-crazy producer Brian "Danger Mouse" Burton and soundtrack composer Daniele Luppi pay homage to '60s Italian film. They tap many of the same musicians from Ennio Morricone's spaghetti Westerns while enlisting Jack White and Norah Jones to inject this elegant, atmospheric project with some contemporary air.

In a Pikel

Cuts to the Chord With plucking fingers that flutter skillfully from string to string, Noam Pikelny fuses the classic sounds of bluegrass with his own modern chords and lyrics. On his latest album, Beat the Devil and Carry a Rail, he makes a show of his cleverly arranged notes. Quickly played, his songs masterfully blur picking styles, bluegrass twang and pop accessibility. He'll merge his five-string strum with the melodic stylings of his favorite collaborators at Brighton Music Hall on Dec. 14. Kathleen Godbold

Flights of Fancy

Scale the Heights At once absurd and natural, Shay Kun's landscapes pop off and tread deeply into the canvas. With orcas bursting from secluded ponds and inflated toys dotting sprawling landscapes, Kun's paintings show that he doesn't see the world with ordinary eyes. Starting with foundations established by the Hudson River School of painters, Kun blots their pristine landscapes with human imperfections and cartoon-like hues. Brightly colored balloons float over broccoli-like trees at the nexus of reality and surreality. The Israeli-born artist brings his vision to Boston with Rebreather, on view at the LaMontagne Gallery through Jan. 7.

Last Scene Here { JONATHAN SOROFF }

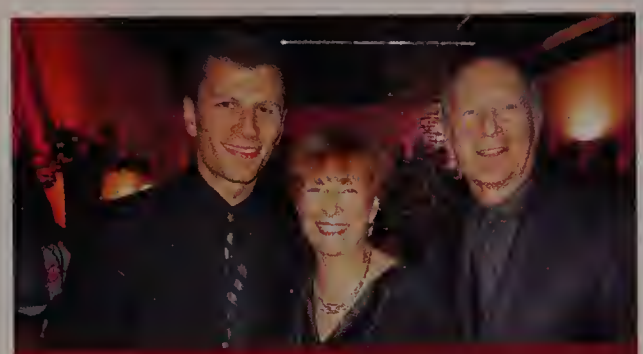
A FAMILY AFFAIR

Life Imitating Art?

It was creepy. It was kooky. Mysterious and spooky. It was altogether ooky. The Addams Family was the theme of the Wang Center's 85th anniversary gala (snap, snap!).

The party began with cocktails in the costume and scene shops, which were transformed into speakeasies/dungeons for the evening, and then continued with dinner on the stage.

Present and accounted for: über-philanthropists Esta and Bob Epstein, 24-hour party people Mary Cashman and Rich Doucette, grande dames Lorraine and Courtney Wang, lovebirds-about-town Christine and Jeff McCormick, several Celtics (easy to spot because of their height) and Celtics Dancers (easy to spot because of how they filled out their uniforms), and others too lovely to mention.



There were also a lot of costumes, including more Morticias than you could shake a stick at, but unfortunately no Cousin Its. The prize for true Addams family connoisseurship went to Shannon Pastuszak, who knew that when the actress who played Wednesday, Lisa Loring, grew up, "She married a porn star and became a heroin addict."

How Many Big Shots Can You Fit in a Hotel Ballroom?

It's a testament to how many people love the organization and its honorees that guests were packed like sardines at the Copley Plaza ballroom for the annual Welcome Home gala to benefit Rogerson Communities.

You couldn't turn around without bumping into someone like cochairs Carolyn and Joe Campanelli with their daughter, Allie, and son-of-a-speaker man Tom O'Neill and his lovely other half, Shelly, broadcasting behemoth Peter Smyth, interior design avatar Eric Roseff, ice-skating great Collin Sullivan, and just about everybody else with a big heart and/or bulging wallet in Boston.

The evening raised beaucoup dinero for the charity (which battles elder homelessness), and a dance group even managed to pull off a flash mob performance, despite the tight quarters. As corporate titan Mike Fish put it: "If a salsa flash mob and a nice meal won't open up your wallet, I don't know what will."

Know Thyself

Talk about taking things literally. The guests at Have a Seat, the Artists for Humanity 20th anniversary gala, went home with hand-painted chairs by artists participating in the program.

The evening took place at AFH's EpiCenter space in South Boston. Cocktails and dinner were only a preamble to a raging after-party (The Improper Bostonian, not coincidentally, was a sponsor), where an eclectic and sexy crowd included the likes of MFA grand poobah Malcolm Rogers, eminence grise Peter Lynch and the bubbly Carolyn, the improbably attractive Christine and Billy Meara, virtuous newlyweds Charity McCourt and the always-contrite Ryan, lifelong besties Charlotte Lewis and the Strauss sisters, Sam and Kim, the Hon. Nonnie Burnes and her venture capital pioneering husband, Rick, art consultant/Bond girl Charlotte Riggs, iconoclastic artists Tristan Govignon and Betsi Graves Ackerstein, and equally groovy others.

Best exchange of the night:

"Are you a Buddhist?"

"No, I'm a nymphomaniac."

Everyone Has a Kink

Horsin' Around at the Ritz was part Marx Brothers movie (Keith and Emiley Lockhart appeared in a horse costume), part gameshow/marriage counseling session for founders Babak and Coryn Bina (they did a Newlywed Game shtick), and altogether delightful.

A fund-raiser for the Bina Farm, which provides therapeutic services to disabled kids, it was (not surprisingly) held at the Ritz, and it attracted the likes of everyone's favorite Finn, Boston Ballet's Mikko Nissenen, the dashing Juan Guillermo Uribe Rubio and his beautiful brunette fiancée, Maggie Feazell, the flawless Harris Krupp, the naturally effervescent Patty Ribakoff, iconoclastic Brahmin Sukey Forbes, and so on and so forth.

Dinner was delicious, the entertainment was outstanding (especially the guy who got wheeled into the ballroom on a massage table), and as for who had the riding crop? It seems ungentlemanly to name names, but let's just say it's someone with a sporting attitude. ✖✖✖
